A man is judged by the company he keeps, and also by his possessions. Packard lends distinction to its owner. The name bears a tradition of quality, sturdiness in construction and classic beauty that is as old as the automobile industry.

When you choose a Packard you know that everyone will admire your good taste and judgment.

THE WEEK IN THE GARDEN

Slips and Cuttings : Conditioning Garden Soil : Planting Out Celery : Fertilizers and Manures : Care of Fruit Trees : The Rock Garden : Repotting Plants : The Lawn

IT is hard to realise that the season is so very late—growth being about three weeks behind what it would be in an average year. But for the past week it has been extremely vigorous, so that plants will soon make up for lost time. A great many plant seeds can still be sown both for autumn flowering and for next summer. Seed beds may now be made with a northern aspect, and, if not exposed directly to the sun, the plants will do better, but the situation should be sheltered. Seeds of the new, scarlet wallflowers or of some other fancied variety planted now will bloom next summer, and, if a greenhouse or conservatory is available, may be made to give bloom this win

PREPARING FOR THE HOLIDAYS

ON LAND AND SEA

BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

WHITSUN is just a week off, and I think that most of us regard Whitsuntide as being a sort of "official" start to the summer holiday season; so it is high time we discussed some of the best places to visit this year.

Personally, I get a lot of fun out of this annual argument about where to go. Everybody in the family, from the wife to five-year-old Tommy, has a different opinion, and, of course, I have mine. A great deal of discussion on the most diplomatic lines is necessary before we arrive at a decision, but, in any case, the whole business is very entertaining.

First of all, we start collecting literature about the places we should like to visit. The railway companies provide us with ample information about the cross-Channel resorts—and, if you cannot get enough from them, the Town Clerk of the town you are thinking about visiting will always be glad to send along some more. The tourist agencies and shipping companies have dozens of fascinating brochures about cruises which will cause you to ponder about the "mysterious East," "the Northern Capitals," "Sunny Spain," and so on.

And then there is the holiday in Ireland, which requires very serious attention. There are so many charming spots around our shores—and inland—that simply have to be seen some time that one is inclined to the view "eventually, why not now?".

FOR IRISH RESORTS

For information about Irish holiday resorts one just writes to the Irish Tourist Association, which has its headquarters in O'Connell street, Dublin, for details of those places within the borders of the Free State. And, for Northern Ireland, the Ulster Tourist Association, of Royal avenue, Belfast, will supply all the information you could possibly need to help you towards making a decision.

One of the biggest difficulties I find about making up my mind where I want to go is this vast supply of literature—every place has a charm of its own, and every kind of holiday has its own attractions. But Whitsun is drawing dangerously near, and a decision must be made quickly if the best accommodation is to be secured.

Speaking of accommodation reminds me that Irish hotels have been improved a great deal during the past few years. Running water has been introduced into the bedrooms in many hotels—sometimes in remote places where you would not expect such a convenience—and the cooking, a most important point, is above reproach in the majority of cases.

As I write this article I have beside me a pile of booklets, leaflets, maps, and so on, which are intended to lure me into spending a holiday everywhere from Londonderry to Lisdoonvarna, from New York to Nijni Novgorod (that particular place is "out," because I could never pronounce the name of the town if I got lost), and from Scotland to Scandinavia.

Let us start with the books about Ireland and play with the idea of a touring holiday (on paper) round our shores—with a few excursions inland.

COAST ROAD SOUTH

Going southwards from the Free State capital we will have a look at Dun Laoghaire (pronounced Dun Leary), as one of the guides helpfully puts it for the benefit of cross-Channel visitors. Here is one of the finest harbours you could find anywhere. Yacht racing about twice a week, and plenty of bathing, in the baths or the open sea. Several golf courses are within easy reach of the town. A few pence on the train and one reaches Killiney, with its great strand stretching away towards Bray, the gateway to the Garden of Ireland, with the Head rearing up 700 feet from the sea and dominating the whole town and its promenade. Golf, tennis, cricket and angling are some of the sports to be had in the district, while there is dancing for the evenings.

Around the Head from Bray we come to Greystones, a charming headquarters for the tourist wishing to explore the County of Wicklow. Wicklow town, looking out from the side of a hill towards the sea, provides plenty of safe sea bathing, and the famous Silver Strand is only two miles further south. Arklow, once a busy fishing and shipping port, is now an ideal place for a restful holiday, with plenty of boating, fishing and golf. For our inland excursions in this county we can visit such places as Glendalough, Delgany (golf again), Enniskerry and the Vale of Avoca.

Beyond the Wicklow Mountains, in County Wexford, one finds such pleasant places as Courtown Harbour and Enniscorthy (with the well-remembered Vinegar Hill). Wexford town, dating back to its days as Menapia, 1,700 years, when it was recorded by Ptolemy, the Roman geographer. Rosslare Strand is one of the most popular spots in this county. Eight miles of silver sands to bathe from and plenty of interesting places nearby to visit. Good hotels and good times can be found there—I know that from experience.

WATERFORD AND TRAMORE

Now we have got round to the south coast and start off with Waterford City, which is quite interesting for the antiquarian and a good headquarters for touring. Dunmore East lies at the mouth of Waterford Harbour, and is a quiet, picturesque little place.

Tramore, seven miles from Waterford, is quite one of the gayest spots I know. A long stretch of firm strand, with safe bathing, plenty of interesting walks, a big dance hall, amusement park and tennis courts, not forgetting the inevitable golf course. Dungarvan, at the mouth of the River Colligan, is a fine health resort, with another popular place for visitors three miles off—Clonea Strand.

Following the coast route from Dungarvan, the road winds uphill, and a little further on one can either branch left for a little resort at Ardmore or keep to the main road for Youghal. Youghal may be said, according to my little books, to comprise of two parts—one, the more modern side, which has grown up beside the strand; and the other, the more historic side, situated between a steeply rising hill and the harbour.

BLARNEY

Cork City hardly needs an introduction. It suggests excursions to what I should think is the most famous castle in the world—Blarney; trips down the beautiful harbour, and visits to Crosshaven and Cobh (the cathedral at this last place impressed me very much when I made a visit there; it has a carillon of 42 bells and a carilloneur who is a master of his art).

Kinsale, Garrettstown Strand, Courtmacsherry and dozens of other little places along the Cork coast all have their special attractions, but we must turn over the pages of our booklets until we reach Glengariff. One way from Cork to Glengariff is through Bantry, a very pleasant place to stay for a while; the other route takes one further inland through Macroom and the Pass of Keimaneigh.

CHARMED THACKERAY

Glengariff—"the Craggy Glen"—the spot which charmed Thackeray in his "Irish Sketch Book." It has charmed many people since Thackeray, and its beauty will always make it one of our most attractive resorts for holiday-makers. Going on from there to Killarney (a thirty mile run by road) one is faced with the problem of setting out the beauties of the hills and lakes in a few words—an impossible task. But if you have not seen Killarney ("Heaven's reflex" somebody called it) then you have missed something, and the sooner you plan a visit there the better for your personal enjoyment.

From Killarney you can make one of the finest tours in Europe—around "the Ring of Kerry, Killorglin, Glencar, Cahirciveen, Valentia Island, Waterville, and back to Parknasilla. The scenery on this tour is really wonderful, and for those who wish to linger longer in the Kerry peninsula they will find excellent hotels and plenty to absorb their time.

DINGLE

Kenmare offers more variety to the tourist, but we must go on to the Dingle Peninsula and the picturesque town of Dingle and so to North Kerry—Tralee, Listowel, with its historic castle (the last to fall to the Elizabethan forces during the Desmond Rising) and Ballybunion. The first thing one notices about Ballybunion is that its station (Listowel) is nine miles away; but, strange to say, one discovers this is rather fun when you want to get away from the ordinary routine.

In addition to bathing from the beach, there are pools among the rocks, and natural diving places everywhere. It is really a great place.

Limerick, historic though it may be, is quite up-to-date in the facilities it offers to visitors, and there are many interesting excursions to be made from the city.

In County Clare we find such places as Ennis, Kilkee (one of the finest watering places on the Irish coast), Lahinch (plenty of good golf), and Lisdoonvarna, with its very important spa. If you do visit Clare, do not forget to see the Cliffs of Moher.

Looking around Galway one sees the pleasant little resort of Salthill, with a splendid golf course, excellent hotel accommodation nearby, an improved promenade, and special bathing facilities for women and children. And this is all within ten minutes by 'bus from Galway City, ancient capital of Connacht. Everybody has heard of Connemara, and this is another district which has to be visited at some time or another—if you really want to know your own country. Clifden, overlooking the harbour of Ardbear, is Connemara's "capital," and a delightful place to stay in. Renvyle immediately suggests shooting and fishing holidays, but we must leave County Galway to go into Mayo. Remember George A. Birmingham's books about Ireland? Well, he was rector of Westport (Canon Hannay) for a long time, and there is still the fascination which he found about the district.

County Sligo makes the perfect tourist centre or holiday resort, and there are such places as Enniscrone (on Killala Bay) and the delightful Strandhill to stay at. Golfers and non-golfers alike have heard of the charm of Rosses Point, which many people have found to be ideal for an Atlantic Coast holiday.

DONEGAL

Bundoran is to the North of Ireland what Tramore is to the South—a grand place for a fortnight or longer (or a week-end if you cannot spare much time). Other places in Donegal which I would select as being good spots for a holiday include Killybegs, Ardara, Gweedore, Creeslough and Rosapenna, not forgetting Buncrana and Moville, on the shores of Lough Swilly and Lough Foyle, respectively.

I will not cross the border into Northern Ireland; I will leave that for a colleague who knows more about the district; but cut back through Leitrim and Monaghan, which, like the other inland counties, have their own special attractions for those who want a country holiday, to Louth. Starting South from Dundalk one finds a number of cheerful little spots along the coast on the way South—Carlingford, Greenore, Blackrock and Baltray. Or one can find plenty of beauty and interest along the Valley of the Boyne before crossing into Dublin County to the resorts which lie so convenient to the capital of the Free State—Skerries, Balbriggan, Malahide and Howth, where you can spend really good holidays.

Before we leave Ireland to go further afield on our "holiday cruise," let us have a look at some of the literature from the Great Northern Railway and the Great Southern Railway. The former draws attention to a number of excursions to all sorts of interesting places north of Dublin, while in a booklet from the G.S.R. (dealing with motor coach tours) I notice an interesting six-day trip, which takes one to some of the places we have been talking about. Leaving Dublin on Sunday one travels down to Killarney. Monday is spent in Killarney; Tuesday on to Kenmare, Wednesday to Cork; Thursday to Wexford, and Friday back to Dublin.

PREPARING FOR THE HOLIDAYS

the services of the G.N.R. Company are the Mountains of Mourne, Enniskillen and Lough Erne, Donegal with its fascinating beauty, the Boyne Valley, and the beautiful coast stretching from Laytown to Portmarnock.

Every taste is catered for—angling, boating, camping, golfing, hiking—while for those who desire to see the country from the armchair seat of a motor coach there is the seven days conducted tour, which completely encircles Northern Ireland. The cost is moderate, and includes accommodation at many of the best known hotels, a courier, and gratuities. There are also many interesting day tours and excursions.

OVER THE SEA

There are plenty of routes to England from this country—B. and I. to Liverpool, L.M. and S. to Holyhead, and so on. Without going very far on the other side of the Channel one meets a number of delightful resorts. Rhyl is but one of them. The whole of North Wales is one big holiday resort—Colwyn Bay, Llanfairfechan, Chester, Prestatyn—there are dozens of really good places for a gay summer holiday. Llandudno has its Marine Drive hewn out of the rock of Great Orme; Colwyn Bay its 50 acre recreation park; Bangor its cathedral and university; Bettws-y-coed the famous

The Promenade, Rhyl, North Wales.

Swallow Falls. But one could talk about these places for ever.

The London, Midland and Scottish Railway has a whole series of special excursions to centres in England by its day and night mail services—"Holiday Return" tickets are available for those people outward bound on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays (very convenient for the average holiday-maker), while the "Monthly Return" tickets can be used outward on any day of the week.

Blackpool is a great place for a holiday, and I have just picked up a very well got up "Holiday Journal" from that town. An eminent physician—Sir James Crichton Browne—has "spoken highly" of the place, as they say. And another man who has found relaxation and pleasure in Blackpool is Mr. J. B. Priestley, the novelist, who says that he got really untroubled sleep there. There are great facilities for recreation of all kinds, and I must say that, having studied this "Holiday Journal," I shall certainly not put Blackpool out of my mind.

But there is the Isle of Man to be considered. From the seemingly ceaseless round of gaiety in places like Douglas one can, if in the mood, slip away from the crowd, and within a few minutes you are in some quiet, secluded spot, surrounded by beautiful scenery and entirely alone with your thoughts. I know plenty of Irish people who go to the Isle of Man year after year, and they declare that they are off again to Douglas or somewhere else on the island this summer. Special Whitsuntide excursions are being arranged by the Isle of Man Steam-packet Company from Dublin.

CRUISES

Cruises, judging from the amount of literature I have got about them, are more numerous than ever this year, and there is no reason why anyone should spend his time "just longing to travel," but never getting anywhere. There are cruises to all sorts of places—the Atlantic Isles, Madeira, the Mediterranean, the Northern Capitals. There is no lack of variety, and, judging from the sailing lists, it seems quite easy to find a boat sailing at just the right date to suit your convenience. America, too, comes within the reach of the holiday-maker. Not only have we boats sailing from Cobh and Galway, but there is a direct line from Dublin to New York in operation now—just step aboard at Dublin and the next stop is New York.

I appear to have rambled on a good deal about this holiday business, but I think we are all inclined to do that—making preparations for going away is almost as much fun as getting there. The holiday question has not been settled, but I think you will find enough suggestions on this page to keep you employed on weighing up their merits for some time.

But, wherever you go, I will wish you all a very happy holiday.

NORTHERN IRELAND

A HOST OF ATTRACTIONS

Northern Ireland is looking its best at this holiday season, and it extends a cordial welcome to visitors from the South. Its seaside and holiday resorts are springing into life, and it is believed that they will have the greatest tourist season of their history. But the crowds have not yet arrived, and those who come early secure the best that can be provided.

There must be many thousands of people in the Irish Free State who have been hearing Northern Ireland discussed from their youth up, but who have never visited the Northern part of the country. It is a pity, for many preconceived ideas of the "cold, black North" would disappear. One has only to visit one of its many attractive holiday resorts, tour its beautiful glens, tramp along its cliff-girt roads, see its appealing strands, old-world towns and villages, its lakes and isles, its silver streams, and learn something of its folklore, and his outlook will be changed. The North has much to show the South, and it is anxious to be known and understood. All visitors are welcome, and every effort is made to send them away happy and content, and with a desire to return. It has a wonderful list of attractions to offer.

BRACING PORTRUSH

Bracing Portrush has an appeal of its own. It is situated on a promontory projecting about a mile into the Atlantic Ocean. Its air is invigorating, its golden strands are a delight, and its golf links (three of them) are world famous. It is a modern town, with up-to-date hotels and boarding houses.

It is a place where you may abandon care, where all the recreation of a modern seaside resort may be enjoyed, and where a few minutes' walk will take one to the peace and grandeur of golden-gorsed country lanes. As a health resort Portrush is almost unrivalled. It has been said of it; "The air is just intoxicating. It is not so keen as one might expect from the Northerly situation, but silky, soft, and yet without suspicion of heaviness." This is due to the fact that it is tempered by the Gulf Stream flowing round the North of Ireland.

Mr. St. John Ervine, the noted author and dramatist, has declared: "Portrush is like good wine, which needs no bush—it speaks for itself. People everywhere have heard of it. Rarely has any place been so bountifully embellished by Nature as Portrush has. It can satisfy a great variety of tastes. The solitary and the gregarious can here be entertained. The air is bracing, but it does not sting. One stands on Ramore Head, looking straight towards the North Pole, and feels the good air enlivening one's lungs."

From this magnificent headland the view is almost unrivalled, covering as it does an expanse from West and East of eight miles. To the West is the silver streak of Lough Foyle and the Blue Hills of Donegal, and the Island of Inistrahull, with its revolving light-house; to the North-East lie the Islands of Islay and Jura, and further East the Scotch coast and the Mull of Cantire, Rathlin Island, and the cliffs of the Giants' Causeway. The glory of a sunset as it dips into the Atlantic like a great ball of fire on a June evening is a view from Ramore Head not readily forgotten.

Portrush is the big holiday centre of the extreme north. Bangor occupies a similar position in the north-east, and its phenomenal growth in recent years is a tribute to the enterprise and foresight of the Borough Council.

It is an admirable centre for visitors who wish to inspect the beauties of the Co. Down coast and the Ards Peninsula. Its attractions are appealing and modern. It has every up-to-date facility and attraction for the most fastidious holiday seeker—golf, tennis, bowls, bathing, yachting, motor-boats, cinemas, "fun cities," and a variety of other amusements. Bangor is distinctly a play centre, but those who require relaxation can find it at Pickie Park, Ballyholme, Strickland's Glen, or the Municipal Park.

Bangor is only twelve miles from Belfast, and visitors can easily visit the city shops, theatres and picture-houses, so that wet or fine they need never experience a dull moment. Health, recreation, scenery, historical interest—all these appeal to the holiday-maker, and they are provided in abundance by Bangor. Before Canterbury, Bangor was a religious seat. Its abbey was founded by St. Comgall, who was born in 432, and in the succeeding centuries its fame as a centre of Christian learning and a nursery of missionary zeal was spread throughout the civilised parts of Europe.

Bangor had the distinction of possessing the first municipal golf course in Ireland. This fine links of 18 holes is situated in picturesque surroundings to the west side of the town at Carnalea, with splendid views over Belfast Lough and the North Channel to the coast of Scotland. In addition, there is the fine private links of the Bangor Golf Club open to visitors. For the motorist golfer Bangor is an ideal centre. After he has played over these two courses he has a choice of several other excellent golf courses in the vicinity. Helen's Bay, Royal Belfast (Craigavad), Corlig, Scrabo and Donaghadee, and still further afield, at Cloughey, there is a sporting course of singular attractiveness.

KINGDOM OF MOURNE

The Kingdom of Mourne, extolled by the late Percy French in the song: "Where the Mountains of Mourne sweep down to the sea," reveals nature in her grandest mood.

It is a kingdom full of romance, of legend and of song, and with a beauty that can cast a spell. At the foot of the Mourne there are several seaside resorts and villages. Newcastle, one of the most charming of Irish watering places, lies in the westerly sweep of Dundrum Bay, with its miles of sand. The towering Slieve Donard—the monarch of the mountain range—stands on guard over Newcastle; while his majestic Court, Slieve Bigniar, Slieve Bernagh and Slieve Croob hold sway over the Kingdom of Mourne.

The mountaineer will find this district a paradise full of pleasant surprises, while the ordinary visitor for whom hill-climbing is too strenuous has the Mountains of Mourne ever with him. Wherever he goes in this area, even as far as Armagh or Belfast, he can get a glimpse of the Mountains of Mourne.

Newcastle has a championship golf course, and no golfer can say he has really played golf in Ireland unless he has sampled it. There is also a smaller ladies course, tennis courts and other amusements, while there is abundant facilities for sea-bathing either on the strand or in the new swimming-pool. Newcastle, with its new municipal park and its proposed extended promenade, is getting into the front line of holiday resorts. Young and old will find here something to please. The young have their games, while older people can sit on the sand dunes in blissful restfulness and feast the eye on some of the most enchanting scenery in Ireland, across Dundrum Bay to the Mourne Mountains, with distant views of Killough and the Isle of Man.

Newcastle is at one extremity of the Mourne Mountains. At the other are Warrenpoint and Rostrevor, nestling under the wooded hills. Nature has been very kind to both, and it is with good reason that Warrenpoint is known far and wide as "charming Warrenpoint."

Warrenpoint has an excellent golf course, tennis courts and swimming ponds, with facilities for boating, yachting and motor boat excursions.

No visitor to Rostrevor can resist the temptation to climb the Cloughmore stone—that huge boulder which Finn MacCoul is supposed to have thrown at a Scotsman. He must have had great provocation; for the stone weighs about forty ton. But it was a small feat for the redoubtable Finn; for did he not lift a piece of Ulster earth and throw it into the Irish Sea, forming at one and the same time the Isle of Man and Lough Neagh? A mile from Rostrevor is "The Fairy Glen," a spot of rare beauty.

The Ulster Tourist Development Association, 6 Royal avenue, Belfast, is ever happy to supply intending visitors with literature as to information, and enable them to make a happy holiday in the North. Those residing in Dublin and other parts of the Free State can obtain from the Great Northern Railway at Amiens Street Station, Dublin, full particulars of all excursions, tours, etc., to every part of Northern Ireland.

IRISHMAN'S DIARY

The Sun Dog : Tyrrell's Pass : "Lloyd's" : From 2RN : Sporting Pictures

"Lloyd's"

"Lloyd's," which has recently purchased a large building in the City of London to enable its present home to be extended, is a unique institution, which sprang from a coffee-house frequented by those connected with shipping and owned by Edward Lloyd.

It is managed by a committee of twelve, and does not undertake insurance; that is done by its members, of whom it was said that "individually they are underwriters, collectively they are Lloyd's." "Lloyd's," through this committee, owns the building where the underwriters do business, provides various services, admits new members, and looks after their money deposits (each new member must deposit £10,000 and have assets value £100,000).

Members are individually responsible for whatever part of a "risk" they underwrite, and any "risk" which is not purely a gamble may now be insured against. Insurance against fire was first accepted in 1882, and earthquake was classified as an acceptable "risk" in 1895, eleven years before the San Francisco disaster occurred, resulting in losses to underwriters amounting to almost £60,000,000.

Although "Lloyd's" is principally associated with shipping in the mind of the man in the street, the non-maritime is by far the larger. The work of assisting vessels in distress is carried out by the Salvage Association, which receives financial support from "Lloyd's" and the insurance companies.

A 2RN Man

Mr. W. A. Beatty, who is one of the staff engaged at the experimental television broadcasts from Alexandra Palace, London, by the B.B.C., is a County Cork man, and before taking a post in England was for a good few years connected with the Saorstat Broadcasting Service. He was the first station engineer at 2RN, and there acquired considerable experience which he has found very useful since.

Wireless engineering is not only his profession, but his hobby, or rather one of them, and he has fairly kept abreast with all the technical developments of later years. That is pretty obvious, since he is the production manager of the Baird Television Company, one of the companies whose process the B.B.C. is going to try out over a period of six months. It will not be any fault of Mr. Beatty if the Baird process is not finally adopted; for he is as keen as mustard on the process and sees a great future ahead for it. To the layman the presentation of pictures by radio will be a miracle for many years to come—at least, that is how I feel about it—but the engineers at Alexandra Palace are very matter of fact about it all.

Mr. Beatty, by the way, was one of the first signal officers in the Free State Army. Away back in 1922, at the start of the Civil War, he was entrusted with the job of setting up wireless stations for the Army in the West of Ireland, after a period of service in Dublin and the South. His headquarters were at Castlemacgarrett, Claremorris, Lord Oranmore and Browne's place, and in a very short time he had stations functioning in Galway, Westport and other towns of the West, which proved very useful when other means of communication had been destroyed. Most of the signal staff on the wireless side in those days were ex-seagoing operators, with a sprinkling of Post Office men also.

Mr. Beatty is not the only Irishman to be connected with television at the B.B.C. Another one is Mr. G. More O'Ferrall—a familiar name in Irish ears. He is a connection of the well-known Kildare family of that name, and is assistant television producer.

Murder in the Cathedral

"Murder in the Cathedral," Mr. T. S. Elliot's play, which opens in Dublin at the Gate Theatre on Monday next, has had a long run in London. It has been running for the past seven months at the Mercury Theatre, Notting Hill Gate, and this week it has been transferred to Oxford and Cambridge. After seven months the demand for seats is still so insistent that Mr. Ashley Dukes has decided, it seems, to run it again for a further six or seven weeks in the autumn at the Mercury. Mr. Robert Speaight played the part of Beckett in the London production. Mr. Martin Browne, who will be responsible for the production of the play in Dublin, is well known here. He has been directing the lectures at the Summer School of Acting, which was founded in Dublin about two years ago. He has a number of successful productions to his credit, both in London and the provinces. Booking for the Gate Theatre seats has already been heavy, I hear, in anticipation of the interest which Mr. Elliot's play is sure to arouse here.

The Sun-Dog

The sun-dog, or luminous patch, occasionally seen in the sky within a few degrees of the sun, against a back-ground of dark cloud, is an accepted sign of coming stormy or unsettled weather. Though showing prismatic colours, its position in relation to the sun makes it easily discernible from a broken rainbow. An interested observer of weather signs recently commented on the appearance of a sun-dog to the proprietress of a village store, remarking that, no doubt, bad weather would follow its advent. It was with some alarm that a few minutes later he overheard the recipient of his information declare to a newly-arrived customer that it would rain before night, for there was a dog's tail in the sky.

Tyrrell's Pass

The pleasant village known as Tyrrell's Pass, through which the majority of motorists drive on their way from Dublin to Galway, has an interesting history. It takes its name from one who was, perhaps, the most successful commander who ever fought on the Irish side in this country. Richard (sometimes known as Walter) Tyrrell came from the Anglo-Norman family of the Tyrrells, of Fertullagh, Co. Westmeath. As a young man he threw in his lot with O'Donnell and Hugh O'Neil, and soon acquired a reputation as a brilliant guerrilla leader. In those days neither the English nor the Irish could trust their own supporters for long, while several Irish chieftains changed from one side to the other, as it happened to suit their personal interests. But Tyrrell never wavered in his allegiance, and it was probably for this reason that O'Neil entrusted him with the task of circumventing Lord Deputy Burrough's plans in Leinster.

Sporting Pictures

Olive Whitmore, painter of racehorses, has been asked by a well-known London art gallery to send over some of her work for exhibition there. Mrs. Whitmore's work has been published in various English and American magazines, and as the artist responsible for the Royal Dublin Society's poster work, her name is familiar to Dubliners. She is sending three pastel drawings to this London exhibition. One of these is a study of Goldcourt, the sire of Golden Miller. Another depicts the Fairyhouse river—one of the most formidable obstacles in the Irish Grand National, with the competitors in action. To me this seems a tremendous achievement, for Mrs. Whitmore has got the 'chasers exactly as they are about to take off. Her third picture depicts three of the most noted obstacles at Punchestown—one of these being "the Old Double," showing the horses about to land at the drop side. The other two scenes concern the stone wall which has to be negotiated in the Downshire, and another fence in the famous Punchestown country. Mrs. Whitmore, in addition to these three pictures, is also sending to London a fine piece of work which shows the great Irish mare, Irish Fun, winning the King's Plate at the Curragh last year. Irish Fun was one of the best animals who ever raced in Ireland. She was killed while being schooled for steeplechasing during the winter months. Mrs. Whitmore was commissioned to paint this picture, and is exhibiting it in London by permission of its owner. Her work is certainly a good advertisement for the Irish thoroughbred.

An Apt Retort

I have just heard of the following incident which took place recently in a court of justice. A certain elderly barrister, somewhat pompous in manner, was appearing for the plaintiff, while the defendant was represented by a young man who had only recently been called to the Bar. In the course of his remarks the young counsel submitted an unusual proposition in law, which rather startled the court, and his elderly opponent immediately rose to the occasion. "When my young friend has been practising as long as I have," he said with a condescending smile, "he will know better than to make such a submission." "My Lord," retorted the young man, "when I have been practising as long as my friend I shall not be making submissions . . . I shall be listening to them."

QUIDNUNC.

Twenty police officers who visited a street in the busiest part of Edinburgh yesterday, where betting was alleged to be prevalent, took a camera with them and made a film from a place of concealment. Twenty-seven persons were taken to the police station in four police ambulances.

13 MERRION ROW, DUBLIN

TRINITY COLLEGE NOTES

TRINITY WEEK FIXTURES

COLLEGE IN SPRING

FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.

WHOEVER walked abroad in the College during the week that is past, at early morning or high noon or dewy eve, must have seen here and there little groups of gowned individuals with heads close together talking heatedly and yet furtively, the mighty architects of fate, the makers and breakers of the world's destiny; for the time is come when new officers must be chosen for the College Historical Society.

Oblivious of their great plans, and associates of the carpe diem order, the rest of the College was availing itself of the beautiful sunshine, at cricket, tennis or pleasant ease on the grass, under the umbrageous arms of those great plane-trees that for many generations have offered kindly shade to many a Littlego candidate, troubled in mind by "fair Dido's and Pious Aeneas" story; or to some would be Scholar awaiting Trinity Monday, or the busy Moderatorship candidate who has long ago decided: "In the making of many books there is no end, and much study is a weariness of the flesh"; and whose fate is still in the womb of time.

The auditor of the "Hist." and Mr. J. W. Wellwood, Sch. Mod., B.A., have crossed over to London to attend the T.C.D. Association dinner there. Mr. Wellwood is an ex-auditor of the "Hist.," and is probably the best known and most popular man in College. There is no department of College life that he has not entered and improved; for he has done many things, and done them all well. Long association with Dublin has dissipated the mellifluous accent of his native Cork, but the traditional enterprise and love of sport of the mythical millions of that county who make this and every other city are to be found in him.

Once more we announce with regret the death of one of our fellow-students, Quintan Hogan, who played on the 1st XV. of last season. He died after a short illness.

Mr. H. F. Sloan has been elected captain of the Hockey Club as successor to Mr. D. J. Coulson, B.A., who has gone into the British Army. Mr. J. A. McDonagh, Sch., has been elected Secretary. Mr. McDonagh is an Irish hockey international.

The Choral Society, under Dr. Hewson, is very busy these days on "The Songs of the Fleet," by Sir Henry Newbolt, and Handel's "Alexander's Feast," which will be sung in Trinity Week at the Ladies' concert.

The College Races

Trinity Week is little more than a fortnight away, and most of the fixtures are to hand. The cricket XI., which is particularly promising this year, is to play a representative XI. from All Ireland, led by Mr. J. B. Ganly, the famous triple international, on the Monday and Tuesday of Trinity Week. The boxing club have arranged a match with Collins Barracks. The hurling club will play National on Monday evening, and the swimming club have invited the London United Hospitals across for their Gala on the Thursday night. Wednesday will be occupied, as usual, with the College Races and the ladies' concert. The Regatta this year should be made more interesting than ever by the installation of a running commentary apparatus, relayed from all parts of the course. There is no doubt that this experiment will make the Regatta much more popular and attractive.

The scholars not of this decade will hold their annual extern dinner, as usual, on Trinity Monday, and the scholars' secretary, Mr. D. A. Webb, Sch.Mod., B.A., will be glad if any ex-Scholars who would like to come would send their names to him immediately.

Records Broken

At the Harriers Championships on Saturday last two records were broken in track events. Mr. D. H. McNeill won the mile in the record time of 4 mins. 36 3-5 secs., and Mr. M. G. Hewson, B.A., the three miles in 16 mins. 17 2-5 secs.

To-day the Cricket XI. play Merrion in the College Park at 2.30, and on Monday in the College Park they play North of Ireland.

On Thursday last the Tennis Club had a visit from Edinburgh University, and were defeated after a very spectacular match. The Scots were too strong in the doubles and were in better practice.

On Thursday last Mr. McBirney read a paper to the University Philosophical Society on "Fortes Creantur Fortibus." Mr. McBirney has had a volume of poetry published before ever entering College.

The most important events of the coming week are: The College Historical Society's debate on the subject: "That this House sympathises with minorities," on Wednesday evening, and the Inter-University Sports on Saturday, 20th, at Belfield, University College's new grounds.

Sed fugit interea, fugit irreparable tempus
Singula dum capti circumvectamur amore.

There is still the quiet evening broken now and then by the sounds of solitary laughter, by some after-Commons lounger, or the chapel bell calling men to evensong and prayer. In the early morning one can still see oarsmen and athletes setting out for a run in the college park and a cold shower. The laburnum and pink hawthorn are even now bursting into bloom, the same that made Goldsmith write: "Dear lovely bowers of innocence and ease. Seats of my youth, where every thought could please."

Daily Programme Review

TO-DAY

NORTHERN IRELAND: Play, "The Ball Turns Once," 8.30.

B.B.C. NATIONAL: Variety, starring Harry Tate and Company, 8.30.

REGIONAL: Concert of British Works, 8.30.

MIDLAND: Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, 9.

BERLIN: Regimental Bands and Choirs, 3.10.

PARIS (P.T.T.): Musical Programme of Old Successes, 8.30.

THE Hospital Sweepstake Draw at the Mansion House, Dublin, will be relayed to listeners from 9 till 5.30 to-day, and resumed again on Monday at the same time.

The visitor to be interviewed at the microphone this week is a member of the Army Jumping Team, which has just returned after its recent successes on the Continent.

To-night's variety programme will come in a relay from the International Hotel, Greystones. Arranged by Jack Rich, the programme includes the No. 1 Army Band, under Lieutenant Doyle.

Mr. W. J. Williams, Lecturer in Education at University College, Dublin, is to talk about General James Shields to-night in the series of talks on Irishmen who have made their names abroad as soldiers. Mr. Williams has made a special study of General Shields's life. (Radio Athlone, 8.45.)

The orchestral concert devoted to the works of British composers in the Regional programme will be conducted by Aylmer Buesst, one of the most experienced all-round conductors in Britain. Among the items a Symphonic Fantasia by Russell Williams will receive its first performance. W. H. Reed's Symphony for Strings, in three movements, also will be played.

Harry Tate and his company in one of their absurd sketches is an attraction for whom very few will not own up. They are the star turn to-night in a very good variety bill. Another "Henry Hall's Hour" will be broadcast from 10.30 (Regionals), and, perhaps, the Song of the Nightingale.

The running commentary on the baseball match from the White City Stadium, London, to-day, is not so much to follow the fortunes of Harringay and White City as to give listeners the general "atmosphere" of America's national game. (National, 4.55.)

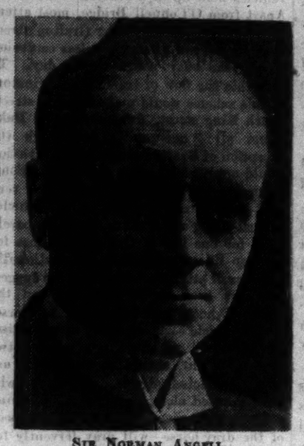
BOOKS OF THE WEEK

The "Have-Not" Nations

Dangers to World-Peace

This Have and Have-Not Business. By Norman Angell. London: Hamish Hamilton. 5/-.

Raw Materials and Colonies. London: The Royal Institute of International Affairs. 2/6.



SIR NORMAN ANGELL.

SIR NORMAN ANGELL'S latest contribution to the discussion of the present international anarchy examines the question whether the danger to world peace is occasioned by the need of the "have-not" nations—the States not in possession of colonies—for territorial expansion, for access to raw materials and for an outlet for their overflowing populations. That this expansion is their desperate necessity is the basis upon which the German, Japanese and Italian claims are publicly based. How terrible the consequence of these claims are we have seen recently in the tragedies of Manchuria and Abyssinia. It is, however, only since the Italian attack upon Abyssinia that the full force of the argument has been realised in Europe, and that the League of Nations has done something to counter the hammer stroke of a "have-not" State.

Claims for Expansion

Even in the United States, it would seem, this argument for imperial expansion at the expense of weak, defenceless and inoffensive peoples is accepted at its face value. Earlier this year the World Peace Foundation over there invited Sir Norman Angell to make a simple statement of the political and economic issues involved in these claims of Italy, Japan and Germany for "some indication of the validity or otherwise of those claims for territorial expansion as representing vital needs." His statement Sir Norman Angell has now expanded into this timely and lucid volume.

This book is all the more important because it is almost the only attempt to investigate the expansionist claim. In America Sir Norman found a very widespread feeling that Great Britain was almost as much to blame as Italy for the war in Africa, as Japan for the war in China, as Germany for the unrest in Europe. Another criticism, not confined to America, is that "the present menacing unrest is due to an inequitable division of the world's resources; to a latent struggle of the 'haves' against the 'have-nots,' the national 'haves' being pictured as territorial magnates, great land-owners as it were, living in luxury, while landless people suffer poverty. We are presented pictures of a bloated and blood-sucking John Bull owning a vast estate, while starvelings clamour at his gate, with the implication that the one thing necessary for justice and peace is a redistribution of 'property' between the nations."

France is condemned as sinning in the same fashion. These allegations are not unfamiliar in Ireland, although they have found no acceptance by our present Ministers.

Fantasy and Fact

Sir Norman Angell's sub-title summarises the reply given in this volume—"political fantasy and economic fact." That assertion is not to be taken in its bare form like that. The book must be read. It marshals the evidence and weighs up the concrete facts against the propaganda of the expansionists. With ample quotation Sir Norman convicts the world peace-breakers out of their own mouths and shows that they are echoed in the most surprising places.

Sir Norman scarcely gives enough attention to the effects of the unemployment problem.

A valuable supplementary study to "This Have and Have-Not Business" is the volume of statistical matter prepared for the Information Department of the Royal Institute of International Affairs. The man in the street may not find this as readable as Sir Norman's volume, but the serious student of affairs will welcome it as a well-arranged and objective statement of the economic facts. Its two parts supply a regular arsenal of information upon world production and colonial production of raw materials and upon the problem of access and present and potential restrictions. Its authors, moreover, do not ignore the fact that "economics are only one side of the picture," and that "considerations of prestige, strategy and psychology are also important, and no solution can be successful unless all these aspects are taken into account."

THE PROBLEM OF SHAKESPEARE

"MR. W. H." AGAIN

A WILD-GOOSE CHASE

SHAKESPEARE shares at least one quality with the atom—he has a talent for dodging his pursuers which leads one to think sometimes that there is an actual conspiracy to prevent the facts being known. One seems to get nearer and nearer to the truth; and then, when the whole problem seems to have come within one's grasp at last, it is seen to be still there, still unsolved.

It is an astonishing thing, in the first place, that so little should be known about one of the greatest men who ever lived. The dates of his birth and death, the names of his wife and children, a reference or two in the records of the time, and a few specimens of his handwriting are virtually all that is left of Shakespeare apart from his plays and poems. Living in an age when every pseudo-celebrity is flooding the bookstalls with reminiscences, it is curious for us to reflect that a great dramatist should have died without leaving the world more than a few scraps of evidence about his life. Even so, it might have been expected that the truth about Shakespeare's life would have been revealed in time. The search has been carried out over generations, and so careful a search would be almost bound to bring results. Other documents, in time, would have come to light, and the patient scholars at last would find enough internal evidence in the works to piece together the author's life.

In almost every other case the search would have been successful, but the longer it goes on the more irritating it becomes. Can it be possible that nothing more will be revealed? Enthusiasts, finding that the orthodox methods have failed, have boldly claimed that the plays and poems were written by somebody else, but they have only raised the problem in another form. Baconians rest their claim on an elaborate cypher-system, but it is not conclusive enough to discourage the supporters of Lord Oxford. However ingenious these "solutions" may be, none of them is authoritative. If Shakespeare was not the author, nobody has been able to prove beyond doubt who the author was, and we are as far from the truth as ever.

As the Sonnets are more "personal" than the dramas, it is not surprising that so much attention has been given to them by scholars, and the catalogues in any big library will show what an enormous number of theories—all different—have been based on them. Another, indeed, has just made its appearance under the title of "The Onlie Begetter," and from what I have seen of the announcements it seems to have embarked on the same kind of wild-goose chase as all its predecessors. Like them, it concentrates on the mysterious "Mr. W. H.," whom the writer's dedication mentions in such a way as to suggest that he was the friend to whom the Sonnets were written.

* * *

It should be easy enough, of course, to find out from these 153 poems not only the identity of "Mr. W. H.," but a number of things about the author as well. The Sonnets refer to many facts in the author's private life—his friend, his relations with a "dark woman," several minor misfortunes of his own, and so on. Surely one would think, all these clues can be made to lead somewhere. Yet the extraordinary fact is that these sonnets, many of which can hardly have been meant for the public eye, reveal as little about Shakespeare as do the dramas or the records of the time, and not much even about his friend. There is no end to the "solutions" which the Sonnets can be made to reveal, but the facts from which they are built belong to a kaleidoscope rather than a jig-saw puzzle, and there is no finality about the pattern which they form. The latest, "Mr. W. H.," I do not doubt, will have strong claims to attention, but already his appearance has brought letters to the newspapers from people who are supporting the other claimants. Even in so small a matter there is no solution, and we may never discover who Shakespeare's friend was.

Britain Discovered

Essays by J. M. N. Jeffries

London and Better. By J. M. N. Jeffries. London: Hutchinson. 18/- net.

IN Latin countries the best of scholarship and good taste is not thought too good for use in periodical writing. Authors are not a class apart from journalists, and there is no such word, no such thing, as "journalese." Doubtless, we owe it to the well-named Yellow Press that journalism is held in lower regard in English-speaking lands; for it was not always so. In the days of Steele, Addison, Goldsmith, Johnson the best of prose—undying prose—was found in journalism. Were Mr. J. M. N. Jeffries living in Goldsmith's time, he would write in the Fee; and his little essays, sketches, prose miniatures would be esteemed at their just value. He writes for—no matter which of the "national dailies." Here are some of his essays, gathered in a book as Goldsmith's are gathered, but likely to be assessed wrongly as merely ephemeral.

A Delicate Pen

Mr. Morton blazed the trail that Mr. Jeffries follows, many will think; but there is a world of difference in the styles of the two writers. In Mr. Jeffries we have a delicate user of the pen—a lover of nice rhythm. Let us take from his Highland sketches an example of his gifts:—

> Poor old valley, I said, valley of Sligachan. So you still linger with your eerie peaks and your solitary inn, your stony and swampy paths, the clouds at your temples and the black lochs at your feet, the gloom and the glory in your breast. Poor old valley, there is no tarred road down you yet, and your quiet is only broken by the sound of the river-waters and by the voices of the climbers upon the ridges blown across you as if they were shreds of your mist. You are an undeveloped old valley, and to walk down you is like walking into wild music. Good piping to you, valley of Sligachan.
> But, O valley and peaks, O castle and tartan and heather-land, how long will you endure as you are? Only a little while and you may be brought into line with modern progress; with your toes to the line of modern progress, Skye, and with orders to step smartly. Listen to the seabirds that swoop round the cliffs and the caves of your coast, crying: "Free! . . . . Free! . . . . Free! . . . ." but answering: "Where? . . . . Where? . . . . Where? . . . ." Where will you and your freedom be when the roads are multiplied and the gates are gone, when plaster houses muster in your glens, when, fed with embalmed food and clad with counterfeit fabrics, your sons and your daughters become citizens of the wide world which has no citizenship to offer?

Scotland's Glamour

Scotland stirred Mr. Jeffries strangely. "Here am I, no child of yours . . . yet when I have left you the names of your dwelling-places will be something nearer than names to me, and the sound of your voice on the lips of your sons will stir me—and why?" Most of us can respond to that; we know Scotland's glamour, its ringing names, heroic story. Wales is stranger land, and we are grateful especially for the chapters in which our essayist interprets the Seven Wonders of the Principality and kindred mysteries:—

> Pistill-Rhyader and Wrexham steeple;
> Snowdon's mountain without its people;
> Overton yew-trees; St. Winifrede's Wells;
> Llangollen Bridge and Gresford Bells.

He is specially good on "Little England beyond Wales," that part of Pembrokeshire which Henry II. settled with English and Flemings. The names on the railway stations still record the mixture of peoples. Here are Bankyfelin, Llanowrox, Llanteague and Kilgelty, places where poetic Cymry dwell. Here, too, are Pass-by, where season-ticketed English, you would say, alight; St. Clear's, a station for distinguished clergy; Red Roses, for bookish poets; and Commercial, a place with an adjective for a name, where Mr. Jeries expected to see "a mass of silent pipe-smokers carrying papers folded at the cricket news."

An Historic Weather Vane

London is not Mr. Jeffries' love, but he knows a world about it. He takes us to Paternoster lane, Creed lane, and Ave Maria lane, "in that true litany of streets round and about St. Paul's, where the English nation began going to school"; or he leads us to St. Mary Woolnoth, that Hawkesmoor church which is built over a tube station and resembles "a garden balustrade upon a temple, and the temple upon a prison gateway." Successive churches have stood where Hawkesmoor built his heavy fane, as far back as antiquity; and some believe that a pagan Roman temple once occupied the site.

The weather-vane above the Banqueting Hall was put up, we learn, by James II. when he was watching for a wind unfavourable to that invading Orange fleet. What a story that spinning vane tells of history's wind-spun fortunes! Our essayist turns to Hyde Park, is contemptuous of the Athenian oratory, and turns from town to country.

Silly Scenery

Who has not marvelled at the seemingly artificial prettiness of the English countryside? We are told of a Frenchman who was taken to an English country house by night. In the morning he was asked, "What do you think of our scenery?" He broke into laughter at the joke—he thought that he was being shown an artificial panorama. Mr. Jeffries told the story to an Irishman, a lover of English scenery, who said: "Of course, he'd laugh. It's so silly and helpless-looking." The Irishman's thoughts were on wide Tyrone's savannahs and distant, windy hills.

Through the English countryside our essayist roves. We learn that Ludlow, the town which we only knew in Housman's song, "When smoke stood up from Ludlow," is in truth a city with a royal past, a centre of history, of frontier war and statesmanship; and so with a score of other places, names to us yesterday, but with Mr. Jeffries as our guide, historical key places hereafter.

When will our essayist write of Ireland, the country which he ought to know, if not best of the four, at least most intimately?

Wolfe Tone as Writer

New Redaction of His Journals

Patriot Adventurer. Extracts from the Memoirs and Journals of Theobald Wolfe Tone. Selected and Arranged, with a connecting narrative by Denis Ireland. London: Rich and Cowan. 6/- net.

A FEW weeks ago we reviewed Captain Ireland's spirited journal d'observation, "From the Irish Shore," in which he told how he saw the Grand Fleet sail from Lough Swilly and was strangely conscious of a ghostly fleet that was there long ago: the fleet that brought Wolfe Tone prisoner to shore. We commented on the pleasing echoes of Tone's journals in Captain Ireland's style. Here, now, is the fruit of study of Tone in a well-arranged series of extracts, yielding a book of over 200 pages that ought to be very popular in Ireland, seeing that Tone's complete journals are not easy to get.

A Vivid Picture

This volume, it is true, does not bring out Tone's political importance. That was not its editor's object. It does give a vivid picture of the gallant, humorous, deep-feeling man of action, with his strong domestic attachment, his observant eye, his love of warfare, song and laughter. From these pages steps the man who "came within an ace of . . . permanently altering the map of Europe," as Captain Ireland remarks, and we are reminded that a portrait of Tone, Auditor of the College Historical Society, still hangs in the Society's reading room, and "next to it, with genuine Irish instinct for dramatic effect, . . . a photograph of Lord Carson of Duncairn."

Tone's Literary Talent

We recommend this volume to readers who are not aware of Tone's rank as a writer—who are familiar with his name as founder of Irish Republicanism, but do not know that this political éclat has obscured his claims to attention as a brilliant depicter of Revolutionary France, and an essayist in autobiography whose style is as flexible and, in its way, as charming as Goldsmith's. By leaving aside Tone the politician, Captain Ireland has done much to win attention for Tone the man of letters, so long ignored.

Cycling Round the World

Revolution's Victim

Nansen Passport. By I. S. K. Soboleff. London: Bell. 12s. 6d. net.

A YOUNG Russian, exiled by the Revolution, decided to set out around the world on a bicycle. He started from Shanghai, where he bought an ancient machine only with the greatest difficulty, and from there pedalled, and sometimes carried his steed, through Siam and the Malay States to Singapore. By now he had earned a little money with lectures and newspaper articles, and he was able to buy a second-hand motor bicycle. On this he traversed India and the Sind desert—days of misery in insupportable heat. Frequently he was flung from his machine, and his body became one vast agonising bruise. At Karachi an English firm offered him one of their brand new motor bicycles with sidecar attached, and upon this he completed the full journey round the world—Persia, Iraq, Palestine, and right through Europe. He stayed for a time in England, and carried on through the United States to Japan, China, and, finally, back again to Shanghai.

Beads from Bread

Clearly, Lieutenant Soboleff found the task of describing so immensely long a journey a little beyond him, and his story of the whole trip is somewhat scrappy and circumstantial; but in his reminiscences of his early days in Russia, and of his flight from the revolutionaries, he is really interesting. After escaping from Russia he joined the army of the White Russians, but after a year or more of constant fighting it became obvious that nothing could stem the force of Bolshevik propaganda. A general retreat was ordered to a stronghold on the borders of Chinese Turkestan called "The Eagle's Nest." This was an impregnable natural citadel, but after a few months the supply of food dwindled to nothing. The depleted White Army tries to reach China, but is slaughtered before it has gone many miles. Soboleff and a companion escape into Chinese Turkestan, and for the next three years they wander from village to village utterly and completely destitute. They make a kind of living by making beads from pellets of bread. It is to be hoped that Soboleff one day will write the full story of those three years; it would be a unique history.

Gipsy Wanderings

Gipsy Fiddler. By Petulengro. London: Sampson Low. 10/6.

ON the strength of a family legend that one of its members was the original from which Borrow drew the famous gipsy in "Lavengro," the author has adopted his name of Petulengro. In him the roaming spirit has found its freest and fullest expression, and the life of Gipsy Petulengro would long ago have worn out the proverbial rolling stone.

The author has been boy prodigy fiddler, wandering musician in Australia, sailor, professional musician, wild animal dealer and diamond miner. He once played in the same orchestra as Albert Sammons and one Edward German Jones, who has dropped the Jones, and is now a famous composer. On his second visit to Ireland during the period 1919-20 he was performing at a theatre in Cork, when Michael Collins and some of his henchmen nearly became embroiled with the Black and Tans. Collins's coolness averted the fight, but the theatre was wrecked afterwards. While he was leading an orchestra in London one of the teachers of the so-called tango there was Rudolph Valentino. The book is a merry medley of ups and downs, meetings with queer people and strange adventures—a typical odyssey of a wandering and originally-minded gipsy.

Poetry and Ideas from America

Reactionary Essays on Poetry and Ideas. By Allen Tate. London: Scribners. 7/6 net.

THIS, to be candid, is one of the most tedious books that we have read in recent times. The author is an American critic, to whom we warmed when we read his title. An American who should take the conservative view is a writer who would have plenty of material on which to exercise his paradoxical genius.

However, Mr. Tate fails to live up to his promise. He writes on John Peale Bishop, whose poetry, he says, will rank him among the best poets of the last decade. "Only the best Yeats is better than this," the critic declares:—

> And Mooch of the bull-red
> Hair who had so many dears
> Enjoyed to the core,
> And Newlin who hadn't one
> To answer his shy desire,
> Are blanketed in the mould
> Dead in the long war.
> And I who have most reason
> Remember them only when the sun
> Is at his dullest season.

The best comment on those lines and on the critic's praise of them is to pass on to something else. Mr. Tate has an essay on T. S. Eliot, which we have studied, half way. Having read so much, of an effort to explain Mr. Eliot, we feel that it would be painful even to read the unintelligible poet himself.

"Animal Biography"

Bufo, the Baboon. By W. S. Chadwick. London: Melrose. 10/6 net.

THERE is, perhaps, no wiser or better way of teaching natural history than through the medium of the good animal biography story. Admitting a certain flexibility of treatment which attributes motives and emotions to the creatures which can only be surmised by the onlooker, there is little doubt but that the skilled observer will interpret rightly in the majority of cases. Mr. Chadwick is a "field" naturalist of immense experience, and his translations of the ways of the wild creatures seem thoroughly in accord with the emotions with which he credits them. Even on this count alone his work is valuable. Though the larger part of his book is taken up by the story of a Chacma baboon he indulges in a positive menagerie of interesting South African creatures in the latter chapters. Elephants, rhino, various snakes and smaller mammals, as the ratel or honey badger, are made to reveal their ways of life. The account he gives of the Chacma baboons is wonderful, and commands admiration for the destructive but intelligent animals. The author has been fortunate in his illustrator, and the work of Miss Dorothy Kay is excellent.

A Modern Pilgrim

A Modern Pilgrim's Progress. By a Fellow Pilgrim. Oxford: The Alden Press. 7/6 net.

THE whole world is in chains of usury, which have been forged by economists, bankers, journalists, politicians and legislators. This claim is made and substantiated by the author, whose anonymity conceals a well-known writer on economics. In fact, all the world's evils can be traced to one source—the "Gold Standard"—which has been set up by the above classes. In the guise of a modern "Christian" who, with his friends, seeks to investigate the root of all our modern troubles, the author describes the adventures he thinks likely would befall that hero of Bunyan had his pilgrimage taken place during recent years.

In the course of his searchings the modern Christian interviews and debates with those above types, which, he considers, have enslaved the world. In time he wars with them, and, aided by loyal friends, eventually secures a fair distribution of this world's ample goods.

In investigating the sources of our modern woes the author has never lost sight of the remedies, and his book is a timely one which would do a vast power of good if widely read.

Shorter Notices

From Saddle and Fireside. By R. S. Summerhays. London: "Country Life." 10/6 net.

Written in a reminiscent vein, this book will appeal to all who are interested in horses. It is a book of sporting memories, mixed up with the thousand and one hints and observations that can only come through a very lengthy experience. There are discussions on hunting, and a well-reasoned plea for the admission to most hunts of the novice who can only afford to hunt very cheaply. Hacking, driving, and even the circus horse are "roped in" by the author's widely discursive pen. The illustrations, by Mr. Maurice Tulloch, are very pleasing.

The Identification of Trees and Shrubs. By F. K. Makins. London: Dent. 15s. net.

Mr. Makins provides a practical guide to the identification of over seventeen hundred species of trees and shrubs to be found in the woodlands and gardens of the British Isles. A striking feature of the book is the extraordinary amount of information contained in a comparatively small space. Apart from a description of each species, there are excellent illustrations of more than thirteen hundred species, in the form of diagrams of the leaves, flowers, fruits or other characteristic portions of the plants.

New Novels

Trail Driver. By Zane Grey. London: Hodder and Stoughton, 7s. 6d. net.

THE ending of the Civil War in North America saw a great glut of cattle in the Southern States. In Texas, during the years of the disturbance, the cattle multiplied by hundreds of thousands, and the low prices which were thus brought about nigh ruined many of the ranchers. It was a bright idea which sent one enterprising cattleman Northwards with a herd of cattle, and the resultant prices he obtained set many others on the same trail. It was a hazardous and "chancy" game though. Vast rivers had to be forded, the Texas "Norther" with its icy blast and accompanying thunder might cause a stampede which would overwhelm the cattlemen beneath the rush of maddened steers; the Indians, especially the Comanches, were hostile.

It is of this period that Zane Grey writes in "Trail Driver." Adam Brite, an old plainsman, has got together a fine herd of cattle, and is staking all on a successful trip North. He encounters every one of the above dangers, plus a running war with a gang of "rustlers." A romance which takes place amid his own party is the theme around which the author has woven another of those great tales which are genuine Western history presented with a spice of fiction.

Times Like These. By Gwyn Jones. Gollancz. 7/6 net.

Mr. Jones has written a depressing, and absorbing, history of a family in a South Wales mining village. This is an often attempted theme, but "Times Like These" is more moving than any we have yet read. Mr. Jones draws a picture of a middle-aged couple with their son and daughter, which truly is an achievement. The father is the best type of miner—independent, proud of his work, and wanting only a fair return for his labour. Coal is his life, and he talks only of conditions in the coal fields. The mother, like all other colliers' wives, long since has been broken in body and spirit by the life she leads. The daughter hates the mines, and, through an office job in the nearby town, escapes to London. These three are important to the story, but it is around the son that the main body of the book is woven. He is unemployed, obtains a job, marries, and then leaves the job, and subsequently his wife. Tragedies like this must be commonplaces in the depressed areas of South Wales, but Mr. Jones describes the unhappy life of Luke and Olive with such sympathy for their simplicity, their ignorance of the world, and their pathetic hope that everything will be all right in the end, that one feels a definite loathing for the conditions that destroyed them. Luke seems wholly justified in his cry: "What are we in the world for; everything do seem so useless!" Read this book to learn how man can live where life is impossible.

Mixed Blood. By Eileen Dwyer. Hutchinson. 7/6 net.

"Mixed Blood" is the story of a large family of mingled United States and Mexican blood, and the scene is laid in Mexico city. The Careys are a tiresome family, they love and hate, and kill and murder with a reckless disregard for other peoples feelings. Miss Eileen Dwyer defeats her own ends by being too consistently sensational, and by admitting no light and shade into the characters of these uncomfortably full-blooded people. We also feel that three or four Careys would have been quite sufficient; why she should consider it necessary to create ten of them is difficult to understand.

Chance Has a Whip. By Raymond Holden. Constable. 7/6 net.

"Chance has a Whip" is described as a "moving satire on modern marriage and its conventional defenders," but the author is more occupied with romance, sentimentality and incident, than with satire, and the marriage is not a peculiarly "modern" one. The hero and heroine are presented as their own greatest enemies. The man, as one so considerate of others that he makes a mess of his own and everyone else's affairs; and the woman as one to whom love meant surrender to the exclusion of everything, including her personality.

In fact everything in this novel has an "extreme" tendency which becomes monotonous.

What Price Gloria! By Geoffrey Clayton. Harrap. 7/6 net.

"What Price Gloria!" might have been written by P. G. Wodehouse, if that distinguished author ever had found it economically necessary to turn out a pot-boiler. Here is the rich young nobleman, the dazzling American beauty, the young nobleman's eccentric friend, the young nobleman's enormously wealthy father; the burglary that goes all wrong, New York, and the Jewish financiers; and, in fact, all the essentials of the modern, slapstick novel. Mr. Clayton's dialogue is in the traditional manner—"After all, and hang it, one meant to say, in the jolly old Signorita a bloke might at least expect to be . . . . etc."; but his work lacks that vital quality which is the charm of Mr. Wodehouse. He has, however, some interesting, and authoritative, things to say about the strange business of music-publishing and song "plugging."

Restless Tides. By F. Strang Morrison. Blackwood. 7/6 net.

WOULD that every publisher maintained the consistently high quality of Messrs. Blackwood's output! "Restless Tides," their latest production, is another of those quietly written, unpretentious novels which actually contain so much more excitement and so much better writing than nine novels out of ten. It tells of two men who set out for a sailing holiday on the islands of the West coast of Scotland, of their stumbling upon a suspicious island, and of a mystery which develops into a first-rate story of treason. Outwardly it can be compared with "The Riddle of the Sands," and bears by no means unfavourable comparison with that work. Scotland is lucky in possessing authors who write so delightfully of their own land—authors who make no pretence to anything more than the telling of a tale and keep the art of straight narrative at so high a level.

The Hammer of Allah. By Douglas V. Duff. Hodder and Stoughton. 7/6 net.

"The Hammer of Allah" is an exciting story of an Arab revolt in Palestine and of a terrorist society, whose leader is married to an English girl of good family. The hero belongs to the Colonial police service, and there is a flying girl who plays a conspicuous part in quelling the revolt. Mr. Duff knows his business. He is accurate in his descriptions of the various tribes, the desert settings and the duties of a police officer, and he confines his fancy to the dangers, the feats of endurance and the thrilling incidents of his tale.

The Rocket. By Jeffery Marston. Joseph 7/6 net.

Crackerjack. By W. B. M. Ferguson. Long. 7/6 net.

The Marceau Case. By Harry Stephen Keeler. Ward, Lock. 7/6 net.

MR. JEFFERY MARSTON'S financier starts in a small way, by steaming open the letters of his employer, a stockbroker, and thereby obtaining the information necessary for independent action. Stage by stage he ascends through the hierarchy of company promoters, until, finally, being in possession of millions, he takes too high a leap, falls victim to the attack of rival financiers, and eventually meets a messy death in an aerodrome—whereupon the thorough-paced scoundrel emerges in the columns of the newspapers as one of these financial geniuses who had done so much for the greatness and glory of Britain. A financial Elmer Gantry is Mr. Marston's "rocket"; and, like Elmer Gantry, he does not scruple to use his women as aids to his advancement. This is an excellent and unusual story. It may be overdrawn—but, again, it may not, and in that case God help the investor!

The hand of the law is not directed against the company promoter, as a rule, until too late. It reserves its energies for the more obvious criminal. Not that Mr. W. B. M. Ferguson's "Crackerjack" is an obvious criminal. On the other hand, while everybody knows that he did it, nobody can catch him; for Crackerjack is a master of disguise, and even his emissaries—we do not betray the secret!—can change their sex at will. "Crackerjack" is of the Edgar Wallace school of crime fiction; it is full of tense situations, the action moves rapidly, and the dialogue is slick and smart.

Mr. Harry Stephen Keeler's "The Marceau Case" is of a different order. The actual murder of Mr. Marceau is conceived on the most fantastic lines, and the process of detection covers half the world. Mr. Keeler is always unusual, and he has composed his novel in the form of a bewildering series of letters, cablegrams and Press messages. To be sure, the letter-writers and journalists concerned write at a length that could hardly have been equalled in the most spacious times of great Victoria; and the curious slang employed by them creates occasional minor difficulties. Yet these tortuous novels of Mr. Harry Stephen Keeler are one of the delights of the crime-fiction-reading public that likes something out of the ordinary, and "The Marceau Case" is as extraordinary as could be desired.

The Draytons. By Gilbert Cassels. Heath Cranton. 7/6 net.

"The Draytons" is a family saga beginning in 1905, and ending in 1934. It is not, however, a war novel. Mr. Cassels is more interested in hereditary tendencies and in the amazing differences in character which are to be found in the members of one household. The action lies partly in England, and partly in Ireland and India. Mr. Cassels is an experienced short story writer, but this is his first full-length novel, and he has evidently found some difficulty in presenting a story in the larger framework. The dialogue, though light, is obviously laboured, and shows a too conscious endeavour to make the characters tell the story and reveal themselves.

To Pardon All. By Angela Manners. Elden. 7/6 net.

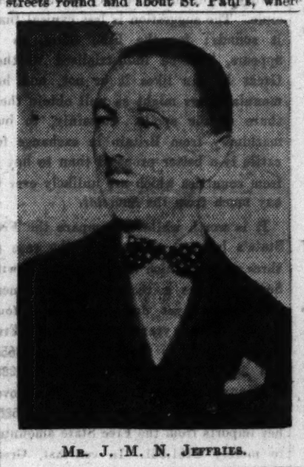
Miss Angela Manners writes a novel with a young German aviator and explorer as her hero. The story is full of incident, of romance, of sentiment, and both hero and heroine find themselves faced with problems which require a great deal of ingenuity before they can be happily solved. Von Helm will endear himself to many readers, for the characterisation is sufficiently vague to allow one's own imagination to work pretty well as it pleases.

The Minister. By James Ewing Cowper. Nelson. 7/6 net.

Mr. Cowper chooses for his hero a middle-aged, conscientious and unselfish minister, and makes a dramatic story by pitting Eglinton's strong sense of duty against the worldly intrigues of his family, and the scandal-loving sense of his congregation. Ninian Eglinton might be described as a modern Job at times, so great are the trials and tribulations which beset him. Mr. Cowper draws his character well, and the background of parish life and intrigue is cleverly done.

My Aunt In Pink. By Richard Blake Brown. Seeker. 7s. 6d. net.

MR. BROWN describes his book as an extravaganza; and certainly it is good and extravagant, though, perhaps, extravagant is the more accurate adjective. With a novel of this kind it is impossible to forecast public opinion. We, ourselves, could establish no contact with "My Aunt In Pink"; but there may be others who will find themselves in harmony with Mr. Brown's surprising imagination. He tells, in rich, somewhat "artistic" prose of midnight exhumations, monasteries crammed with gourmets, brand new castles bursting into flames, sealed packets addressed to cardinals, and envelopes containing thousands of pounds. There are people called Lord Shepherd's Bush, the Earl of Ealing Common, Valerian Stiles, and the Reverend Nigel Hedon. And Mr. Sixtus Petteris devotes his life to decorating the tops of walls with coloured broken glass. You get passages like this: "After washing we were led, incongruously enough, to a superb, but bewildering apartment, in the Gothic style, a mass of crockets, finials, cinquefoil cuspings, pendants, bosses, scollops, and other twistifications, all intensely neurasthenic." And they are followed by passages like this: "On coming out of the Piazzo I almost collided with a bewilderingly blonde woman, who, I was told afterwards, must have been Mae West getting atmosphere for a new film, the setting of which was to be largely the Vatican."



MR. J. M. N. JEFFRIES.

Braille in Gaelic

The Gaelic Braille System. Grade I. A Braille Primer for Irish. Dublin: The Irish Association for the Blind.

Two years ago the Irish Association for the Blind set up a Gaelic Braille Type Commission. The members constituting this special body were Miss H. M. Macaulay, L.L.C.M.; Mrs. J. P. Neary, and Dr. Carl G. Hardebeck, the well-known authority on Irish music.

They have spent their time profitably in what must have been very arduous labours. One of the first fruits of their work is now before us in the shape of a Braille primer for the teaching of Irish to those who are afflicted with blindness. Among the blind persons in Ireland are a considerable number who speak Irish, and from time to time some of them can be seen in Dublin's streets conversing animatedly in the language. To these and to the teachers of the sightless this Gaelic primer will be very welcome indeed. The devising of this uncontracted system has been done by this Commission, and the embossing by the Irish Association for the Blind. Between these two bodies the Irish speaking blind people have been presented with a work which will remove some of the difficulties that prevented themselves from making full use of their knowledge of Irish. The work must have been costly, but its object is so praiseworthy that whatever its costs it has been, as the primer shows, eminently worth the money and time spent upon it. This is by no means the least of the services which this Association and Miss Macaulay, Mrs. Neary and Mr. Neary have given to their people.

NEWS SUMMARY

IRELAND

A conference of air experts and citizens of Cork was held in Cork yesterday in connection with the project to form an Irish air transport service.—(Page 9.)

GREAT BRITAIN

Last night it was announced officially that Mr. J. H. Thomas, Secretary of State for the Colonies, has tendered his resignation, and that the King has been graciously pleased to accept it.—(Page 9.)

ABROAD

Alexander MacKay, the Scotsman condemned on a kidnapping charge, and his American companion, Joe Kristy, were executed at the San Quentin Prison last night.—(Page 9.)

SPORTING

At Salisbury yesterday Bloater won the Salisbury Cup.—(Page 12.)
At Ayr yesterday Reefer won the Montrose Handicap.—(Page 12.)

FINANCIAL

London Stock Markets were small and dull. There were a few bright spots among Industrials. The "Twin Eagles" were weak.—(Page 14.)
The Treasury bill rate was higher at 11s. 3d. per cent., compared with 10s. 7½d. per cent. last week. The Bank announced the purchase of £600,774 in bar gold.—(Page 14.)
Dublin Market was idle. Alliance Gas and Guinness were both easier. Great Southern Guar. and Pref. were higher.—(Page 14.)

Trade with Britain

The trade returns for April have in themselves slight interest: for that mercy let us be thankful. It is not so very long since the return for every succeeding month could be trusted to show a worse state of affairs than its predecessor had shown. Now the case is altered. The figures for April, it is true, are a fraction smaller—in regard both to imports and exports—than the figures for March; but the difference is very slight, and gives no reason to suppose that the upward tendency of the Free State's commerce has been halted. Since early last year the trade returns have presented a brighter picture, and the people have experienced a corresponding sense of increased confidence. The change, of course, is due to the two trading agreements with England—which, if they have restored only a very small proportion of the old, thriving commerce, have relieved the farmers of much of the pressure of the economic war. We have urged before, and we urge again, that the Free State Government ought to take advantage of this improved situation to reconsider its entire economic policy. In the first place, is there any reason why a more comprehensive settlement should not be made with Great Britain? The fact that she has consented to the coal-cattle pacts suggests that she is not ignorant of the disadvantages of economic conflict, and has much to gain from a permanent modus vivendi. It is probably true to say, as many people say, that a settlement of the political differences between the Free State and Great Britain would lead automatically to a settlement of the economic war; but we see little prospect of any harmony in political relations so long as Mr. de Valera is enthroned on this side of the Channel. Surely the two quarrels could be separated. If there is no principle to prevent the conclusion of trade pacts which give England a monopoly of certain goods in the Saorstát, and allow the Saorstát large quotas for cattle in England, surely the next step—to extend England's monopolies and to remove the special duties—would impose no great strain on the conscience of either side.

There is so much room, even within the framework of Mr. de Valera's economic policy, for a satisfactory agreement with England. In certain classes of commodities the Free State never can hope to be self-sufficient. Her home market never will be large enough to support heavy industries, and there is little likelihood of such a collapse of the entire industrial systems of Britain, the United States, Germany and Japan that she can look forward to an export market for heavy goods. Why cannot Mr. de Valera's Government make a pact which will give British manufacturers a monopoly of all material that cannot be made at home in exchange for elaborate concessions to Free State agricultural produce? A study of the trade returns shows that during the first four months of this year the twenty-six counties imported not quite a million pounds' worth of "machinery and electrical goods and apparatus." Doubtless, most of these goods came from Great Britain, and might not have been obtained conveniently from anywhere else; but they figure in no pacts—the Free State, one might say, gets no credit for them. Her new industrial programme, whether it is carried out quickly or slowly, requires machinery; and Great Britain is only too glad to supply machinery. There can be no question of competition with native industries, since the great bulk of these goods are not made in the Saorstát. Great Britain has helped to industrialise many countries, and suffers to-day for her pains; but we do not think that her manufacturers would complain about contracts for the supply of machinery to the Saorstát, even if they knew that at some future time that machinery would deprive them of a valuable market. Mr. de Valera hardly could object on any point of principle. The suggestion is less cynical than it sounds; for the Free State, as it appears, will be industrialised whether Great Britain likes it or not, and her manufacturers might as well obtain their share of the spoils. Certainly, to buy machinery from Britain in exchange for cattle is a better proposal than to buy it from countries which are unlikely ever to buy much from the Saorstát.

It is worth while to compare the Free State's balance of trade in the case of three nations which have made pacts with her. She has a reciprocal arrangement with Spain; yet during the first four months of this year Spain sent the Free State produce to the value of £130,655, and bought the equivalent of £5,288. Germany's exports to the Free State over the same period were valued at £481,586; her imports from the Free State amounted to merely £161,581. In contrast, Great Britain and Northern Ireland sold the Free State goods amounting in value to £6,894,687; but in return they bought goods to the value of £5,824,578. The ratio is not precisely "fifty-fifty," but it is sufficiently near that ideal to point the inevitable moral. We urge Mr. de Valera's Government to take the lesson of these figures to heart, and to open negotiations at the earliest possible moment for an elastic, yet binding, agreement with the United Kingdom. Its terms could be of the simplest. They would bind the Free State to buy from Britain whatever goods she cannot manufacture for herself, and would require Britain, in return, to grant a free, or nearly free, market to Saorstát produce. The question of the land annuities, we think, could be shelved without any great difficulty by a little quiet work among the diplomatists. As for the inevitable argument that the growing industrialisation of the Free State would reduce the market for British goods, it could be countered by the plea that the bargain almost certainly would raise the Free State's standard of living, and therewith the demand for British goods. We commend some such pact to Mr. de Valera's attention. It differs from the "pre-economic war" system in that the Free State would have an unchallenged right to protect her own industries. At its best, it would provide a lucrative exchange; at its worst, it would be better than the existing pacts, which, when all is said and done, are makeshifts.

Palestine and Egypt

Trouble in Palestine continues to grow apace. Smouldering discontent among the Arab population has been bursting into flame of late, and the cold-blooded murder of several Jews has been the cause of widespread uneasiness. Palestine's importance, from the strategic point of view, has increased enormously during the last few months. Now that Italy seems, for the time being at any rate, to have established her power in Abyssinia—which has been annexed formally to the Italian Crown—the port of Haifa has assumed a value that never had been suspected by the layman, and it has become a matter of vital moment to strengthen the position of Great Britain in both Egypt and Palestine. Nobody with any sense wishes to see a war between Italy and Great Britain; but it would be foolish to pretend that the risks of such a conflict have not increased very greatly since the collapse of Abyssinia's resistance. From the British standpoint Signor Mussolini's openly declared intention to turn the Mediterranean Sea into an Italian lake constitutes a direct threat to Britain's communications with India and the East generally; and the Suez Canal, which was described by Kaiser Wilhelm as the British Empire's jugular vein, cannot be allowed to be dominated by Italy, or, for that matter, by any other foreign Power. The alternative to a war between the British and the Italians seems to be the consolidation of the British position in Egypt and Palestine. It is a significant fact that, since Signor Mussolini began to massacre the Abyssinians, there have been more or less serious revolts in both these countries. There seems to be little doubt that Italian influences have been at work; and, particularly in Egypt, they have been at work with some success. In Palestine the stirring up of trouble is exceedingly easy; for the Arabs hate the Jews, and, but for the presence of a fairly strong British garrison, pogroms would be far more frequent than in fact they are. The present disturbances seem to be fairly well organised. They are sporadic in nature, and, apparently, are calculated to maintain a feeling of uncertainty among the Jewish population. The Government is setting up a Commission to inquire into the situation; but there have been so many Commissions already—and their findings have been ignored so consistently—that nobody in Palestine has much confidence in this latest body. It is high time that the British Government should make up its mind definitely that British interests not only in Palestine and Egypt, but throughout the world, must be safeguarded properly. During the last fifteen years or so there has been far too much vacillation in this respect. Britain's strong arm has been weakened by the desire of the home Government to fulfil its obligations under the League Covenant; but, since no other nation has taken the least trouble to follow her example—and the Powers with colonial interests, in particular, have been merely laughing at Britain's punctilious behaviour—the time has come when His Majesty's Government should begin to re-assert its authority. The great essential is to formulate a definite policy, and then carry it into operation. Both in Palestine and in Egypt strong action is necessary for the preservation of imperial interests. Those well-meaning persons, who seem to be ready always to sacrifice the British cause, can console themselves with the thought that, however firm British rule may be, the rule of Signor Benito Mussolini would be a very great deal firmer.

"Empire Day"

A very curious situation has arisen in England. For many years past it has been customary that the institution of Empire Day should be respected with some slight ceremonial in the schools—both the privately-owned schools and those which are under the control of local authorities. The ceremonial for this year's Empire Day was to include the reading of a message specially composed by the late Earl Beatty. To the general surprise, however, the London Education Committee—a department of the London County Council—has refused assent to the reading of the message in schools under its jurisdiction. No reason is assigned; but most people assume that the Socialist L.C.C. dislikes the patriotic and highly national sentiment of Earl Beatty's document. Two years ago the same Council changed the name of Empire Day, for use in its schools, into Commonwealth Day, and may be basing its ban on the fact that the message refers on several occasions to "Empire Day" and "the Empire." "Let us celebrate Empire Day," it runs, "in a spirit of deep thankfulness that we are citizens of a great and united Empire, powerful in the cause of world peace." Sentiments of this kind do not appeal to the Socialists, who see in them the roots of "exploitation" and of "militarism." Already the London County Council has refused to allow the Territorials to use Battersea Park as the scene of a recruiting performance; and a subject authority has hampered enlistment in the same force by its refusal to grant pay to employés during their period of training. We shall not be surprised if these incidents create substantial trouble in England. The Government is making a strong effort to revive nationalistic feeling and to encourage recruiting, and is unlikely to tolerate interference from a subordinate authority. Admittedly, the idea of empire is abhorrent to Socialists; yet, while the fact exists—while England, whether they like it or not, remains part of a great Empire—it is hardly their business to cramp the school-child's respect for his country.

Proposed Traffic Laws

It is to be hoped that the Dublin Corporation will grant its speedy sanction to the new traffic proposals. These proposals have been drafted as a result of the conference, which took place last October, between a sub-committee of the Corporation and certain representatives of the Garda Siochana. They appear to be intelligent, and sufficiently drastic to combat the very real problem of Dublin traffic. In the first place, the present chaos of O'Connell Bridge has attracted the attention of the authorities, and numerous suggested improvements have been put before the Corporation. On paper these improvements are extremely confusing; but, probably, when, if ever, they are put into operation, the city will find little difficulty in appreciating their object. Certainly, reorganisation is necessary at this point, where vehicles with an otherwise free passage are blocked by vehicles held up in a different traffic line. Apart from O'Connell Bridge, most attention has been given to the Grafton street area—a scene of almost hopeless confusion during the busy hours of the day. To facilitate the flow of traffic the originators of this scheme would make Grafton street, South King street, Anne street and Duke street all "one-way"; and, with the exception of Grafton street, this restriction would apply at all hours of the day. Some supervision of these side streets is a very long time overdue; for, with vehicles parked along either kerb, there is barely room for one line of traffic, much less for the two lines that are locked continually in a war of attrition. Further, the suggestion has been made that, between the hours of noon and 6.30 p.m., no horse-drawn vehicle carrying heavy merchandise, or no motor vehicle which exceeds two tons in weight, should be allowed to use these restricted streets. Motorists who have crawled along Grafton street behind a dray—their speed regulated by the speed of the dray-horse—will pray fervently for the acceptance of this proposal. We look forward to the inception of the scheme—and with less enthusiasm to the confusion it will precipitate for the first few days.

COURT AND PERSONAL

The King has granted his patronage to the Royal Automobile Club, St. George's Hospital, King Edward VII. Hospital (Windsor), and the Royal National Orthopædic Hospital.

Yesterday the Duke of York presided at a meeting in the London Mansion House to inaugurate an appeal for a national memorial to the late Earl Jellicoe. His Royal Highness said that, as one who had the great honour of serving under that great Admiral, he warmly recommended the establishment of a Boys' Home at Halbrooke, in Kent, and that any surplus money subscribed should be used for the benefit of destitute children of ex-Service men.

The Duke and Duchess of Beaufort are the guests of Sir Harold and Lady Nutting at Auchintoul Lodge, Sutherland, where they are enjoying excellent fishing on the River Helmsdale and the Kildonan Lochs.

Lord and Lady Vivian and Admiral of the Fleet Sir Roger Keyes and Lady Keyes are among the passengers returning to England to-day after an interesting pilgrimage in Salonika and Gallipoli.

The Earl and Countess of Willingdon are the guests of the Marquis and Marchioness of Camden at Bayham Abbey, Kent, for Whitsuntide. The Hon. Sir Hugh and Lady O'Neill will leave London next week for Cleggan Lodge, Ballymena, Co. Antrim. Sir George and Lady Hennessy have arrived in London, and will spend some time there.

The Government of the Spanish Republic have conferred the decoration of Comendador de la Orden de la Republica on Sir Henry Wellcome, F.R.S., the founder of the Wellcome Research Institution in London, and whose research work in Khartoum is universally acknowledged.

Lord and Lady Baden-Powell, who are returning on the Llandovery Castle, are expected at Southampton next Tuesday. When the steamer called at Las Palmas they had a remarkable greeting from the Teneriffe Boy Scouts, who assembled in full force at the landing stage and cheered the Chief Scout enthusiastically. He is reported to be in excellent health and greatly pleased with his South African tour.

The Lord Chief Justice of England, Lord Hewart, and Lady Hewart intend to spend the Long Vacation in South Africa. They will leave at the end of July, and will be away for at least two months.

A marriage has been arranged, and will take place on 23rd June, between William Douglas Wolseley, Royal Ulster Constabulary, "Elstree," Limavady, second son of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Wolseley, Ardan, Ballymena, and Noel Mary, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Coleman, Belfast Bank House, Newry.

The engagement is announced between John Lewen, younger son of Mr. and Mrs. Brinsley Le Fanu, Sydney Parade avenue, Dublin, and Margery Caroline, elder daughter of Dr. and the late Mrs. Cecil Brew, 5 Prince of Wales terrace, Bray, Co. Wicklow.

Mr. George P. Moore leaves 29 Upper Merrion street for two weeks.

Mr. F. J. Morrin has left 14 Fitzwilliam place until July 1st.

Dr. Henry Stokes has left town for a week.

Dr. T. Garratt Hardman has left 21 Fitzwilliam place until Tuesday, 2nd June.

Dr. Merrin will be away from Dun Laoghaire until June 10th next.

HINDENBURG OVER IRELAND

BIG AIRSHIP SEEN FROM CO. ANTRIM

PRIEST DROPS WREATH FOR BROTHER'S GRAVE

THE airship Hindenburg, which left Lakehurst, New Jersey, on Thursday morning, passed over Ulster at six o'clock last night.

A coastguard at Islandmagee, County Antrim, said: "We saw the Hindenburg quite plainly, and picked up her registration letters and her name in big red letters. For some time while she was flying down the North Channel a small aeroplane was flying around her, and was later taken on board."

The Hindenburg carries a small aeroplane.

Thousands of people in Larne and district had a perfect view of the airship, which was about 1,000 feet up, and was travelling at a speed of between 70 and 80 miles per hour. It passed over Belfast Lough, and proceeded over the County Down coast before crossing the Irish Sea.

The big Zeppelin was expected to arrive at Frankfort-on-Main about four o'clock this morning.

She passed over Barrow-in-Furness about 7.30 last night. She was first sighted off the west coast of Cumberland about 6.30, heading from the direction of Ireland.

There was a touching incident as the Hindenburg passed over Keighley, a few moments after eight o'clock. She dipped to a very low altitude, and a parcel was seen to drop near the centre of the town.

SPRAY OF FLOWERS

This was recovered by two boys, and when opened was found to contain a spray of freshly-gathered carnations, a letter, a picture of a flying-boat, and some specimens of the Hindenburg souvenir stamp. The letter, written on the official notepaper of the Hindenburg, read:—

"Mai 22, 1936. To the finder of this letter. Please deposit these flowers on the cross on the grave of my dear brother, Lieutenant Franz Schultz, 1 Garde Regiment, prisoner of war, in Skipton Cemetery. Many thanks for your kindness.—Johann P. Schultz, first flying priest."

Then followed: "Aachen Lothringenstrasse 62, Germany. Please accept the stamps and the pictures as a small souvenir from me. God bless you. The first holy man on the Hindenburg."

Within a short time the finders were on their way to the Morton Banks Cemetery, two miles from Keighley, where a number of Germans who died in a local hospital during the War were interred.

MR. THOMAS AND THE FREE STATE

COMPARATIVE FAILURE OF HIS EFFORTS

By Our Political Correspondent.

The passing of Mr. J. H. Thomas from the arena of British politics has something more than a casual interest for the people of the Free State. He had charge of the Dominions Office since 1930, but it was only when President de Valera, in 1932, shortly after his coming into power, raised the questions of eliminating the Oath of Allegiance and withholding the land annuities that he came prominently into Free State affairs.

The default of the Free State Government in making payment of the required amount in respect of the land annuities in June, 1932, was followed, in July of that year, by the introduction in the House of Commons of the Free State (Special Duties) Bill. On the second reading of that measure Mr. Thomas referred to the efforts that had been made to arrive at a basis for arbitration on the subject of the annuities, the only limitation being that the members of the Tribunal should be drawn from the British Commonwealth. He added that the powers taken in the bill would not be used "to extract a penny more than the actual amount in default."

On the same day the names of the Free State delegates to the Imperial Conference at Ottawa were announced. In Ottawa, where they met Mr. Thomas, there were further efforts towards a settlement. In some quarters it was believed that very real progress had been made, but in the end the delegates came home, and nothing more was heard of the basis of agreement with which rumour had been busy.

Previously to this Mr. de Valera and Mr. Sean T. O'Kelly went to London, and had a conference at Downing street with leading members of the British Cabinet, but without result.

All through the first year of President de Valera's Government there were continuous exchanges between himself and Mr. Thomas. Early in April a series of Notes was published, in which the Oath of Allegiance and the annuities were the main topics. In one of these Mr. Thomas stated that "there can be no conceivable hope for the establishment of a united Ireland except on the basis that its allegiance to the Crown and its membership of the British Commonwealth will remain unimpaired."

In November, 1933, Mr. Thomas, speaking in the House of Commons, said: "Mr. de Valera has told us that his ultimate aim is recognition for a united Ireland as a Republic, with some form of association with the British Commonwealth, in some circumstances, and for some reasons, and the recognition of the King as the head of the association. Any such proposals would be totally unacceptable to His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom."

When asked to comment on this statement, Mr. de Valera asked whether the British Government would state that the establishment of a Republic would not be made the excuse for aggressive hostility. "Let us have such a statement," he said, "and the whole position will be fundamentally altered." There was no reply.

The relations between the two countries have been more definitely defined as the result of a decision of the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords, and the right of secession has been established. The big issue during Mr. Thomas's régime at the Dominions Office—that of the land annuities—remains completely unsolved. The special duties on both sides continue to hamper trade, and Irish agricultural exports suffer. It is true that the coal-cattle pact has to some extent relieved the situation, but otherwise the impasse remains.

On the whole, Mr. Thomas's administration at the Dominions Office did little to improve relations with the Irish Free State.

TOWN TENANTS TRIBUNAL

A public sitting of the Town Tenants (Occupation Tenancies) Tribunal will be held at 10.30 a.m. to-day in Circuit Court, Chancery place.

Adolf Hitler has agreed to become the trustee of the Valhalla, the "Temple of Fame," built in Munich between 1830 and 1841 by the Bavarian King Ludwig I. This huge hall contains busts of Germans who were deemed worthy by the founder to grace it. The task of selecting Germans for this honour lies now in the hands of Herr Hitler.

RESIGNATION OF MR. J. H. THOMAS

SEQUEL TO RECENT BUDGET RUMOURS

TEXT OF LETTER TO PRIME MINISTER

"NAME AND PRIVATE AFFAIRS BANDIED ABOUT"

"THE Right Honourable J. H. Thomas, M.P. (Secretary of State for the Colonies), having tendered his resignation, His Majesty the King has been graciously pleased to accept it."

This announcement, issued last night from 10 Downing street, marks the close of Mr. J. H. Thomas's Ministerial career.

On Wednesday last the Judicial Tribunal concluded its inquiry into the alleged leakage of British Budget secrets. On that day also Mr. J. H. Thomas tendered his resignation to the Prime Minister, on the ground that the "way in which his name and his private affairs had been bandied about" had rendered it impossible for him to remain a member of the Government, and "to pull his full weight."

Mr. Baldwin, in accepting the resignation, wrote: "You have acted as I should have done in your place. . . . The loyal support you have given through five strenuous years to the National Government will always be remembered by those who have worked with you."

Mr. J. H. Thomas has held office five times as Cabinet Minister. He retained his post as Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs in the second National Government until June, 1935, when he was transferred to the Colonial Office.

Mr. Thomas will see the King at Buckingham Palace, and relinquish the seals of office, probably on Monday or Tuesday next.

It is generally understood that Mr. Thomas's resignation will be followed by a re-arrangement of the Ministry, and that Sir Samuel Hoare may return to office, possibly as First Lord of the Admiralty, or as Secretary of State for the Dominions.

OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE

In addition to the announcement of Mr. Thomas's resignation, copies of the following letters which have passed between him and the Prime Minister were issued last night from 10 Downing street:—

MR. THOMAS TO PREMIER

"Colonial Office, Downing street,
"May 20, 1936.

"My Dear Prime Minister,—I understand that the Tribunal has to-day finished its public sittings, and will, therefore, proceed at once to consider its report.

"Before, however, the report is known, and without any regard to what it may contain, I feel that it is my duty, for reasons which I will state, to send you my resignation from the Government.

"You will be aware that immediately the announcement of the appointment of the Tribunal was made known, I wrote to the Secretary and offered to give evidence before it. This I have done, and my evidence is public property. In addition to my evidence, all my private and personal transactions have been submitted to the Tribunal.

"I have come to my decision because the way in which my name and private affairs have been bandied about renders my continuation as a member of the Government impossible.

"You will know that my only object in joining a National Government was because I felt sure that the coming together of all political parties—regardless of past differences—was the only chance of our pulling the country through its crisis. To-day I hold that opinion even more firmly than before, but, as far as I myself am concerned, I feel that instead of being a source of strength to your Cabinet I shall merely be a drag on it, and not in a position to pull my full weight. This will be inconsistent with my desire to serve my country which—I hope my past public life justifies me in saying—has always been my object.

"I ought, in fairness to all parties in the House of Commons, to emphasise that I feel no resentment at this demand for a full and impartial investigation, in so much as the absolute integrity of public life in this country was involved.

"It is well known that I have no political differences with my colleagues or with the policy of the National Government. I am fully conscious of the grave and difficult problems—changing almost hourly—which have to be faced by the Cabinet, and in coming to this decision, which means so much to me, I can only wish you and all my late colleagues God-speed in leading the nation out of its present difficulties.

"Yours very sincerely, (Signed) "J. H. Thomas.

"The Right Hon. Stanley Baldwin, M.P."

PREMIER'S REPLY

"10 Downing street, Whitehall,
"May 21, 1936.

"My Dear Jim,—

"You have acted as I should have done in your place.

"I accept your resignation with deep regret, which I know will be shared by all my colleagues.

"The loyal support you have given through five strenuous years to the National Government will be always remembered by those who have worked with you.

"With all good wishes,
"I am,
"Very sincerely yours,
(Signed) "Stanley Baldwin."

GENESIS OF THE INQUIRY

The resignation of Mr. J. H. Thomas comes at a moment when the world is awaiting the report of the Judicial Tribunal which inquired into the alleged leakage of Budget secrets.

Not since the famous Marconi inquiry has so much interest centred in a judicial investigation.

The Tribunal was appointed as the result of questions raised in the House of Commons. For several days rumours had been freely circulated, and the name of Mr. J. H. Thomas was associated with them.

The name of his son, Mr. Leslie Thomas, who is on the Stock Exchange, was also mentioned.

Mr. J. H. Thomas told the Tribunal that when the rumours came to his ears he went to Mr Neville Chamberlain (Chancellor of the Exchequer), and told him that the honour of his son and his own honour were at stake. He demanded that an inquiry should be instituted, so that both his own name and that of his son might be cleared of any imputations.

Mr. Charles Crocker, the man who unmasked the "fire raisers," carried out a preliminary investigation and reported to the Committee of Lloyd's. Then it was announced in the House of Commons that the Government had decided to set up an impartial Judicial Tribunal to take evidence.

Mr. Justice Porter, one of the Junior Judges of the High Court, was appointed Chairman of the Tribunal, and his colleagues were Mr. Roland Oliver, K.C., and Mr. Gavin Simonds, K.C.

The Tribunal held its first public sitting at the Law Courts on Monday, May 11. The courtroom was crowded daily, and the proceedings were followed with unfailing interest. The Tribunal sat for eight days, and it concluded the hearing of evidence on Wednesday last.

THE EVIDENCE

Evidence was given of Budget risks taken out by Sir Alfred Butt, M.P. for Balham, and by Mr. Alfred Bates, "an old friend of Mr. J. H. Thomas." It was stated that Mr. Bates had offered Mr. Thomas £20,000 for his life story, and had procured for him a house at Worthing—on which Mrs. Thomas was said to be "very keen"—for a sum of £15,100. This sum was to be deducted from the amount of the contract for Mr. Thomas's autobiography. In addition, Mr. Thomas was to receive fifty per cent. of all profits in excess of £25,000 on the book.

A crowded court heard Mr. J. H. Thomas state that he had been a Cabinet Minister and had known the contents of nine budgets, but that never at any time had he divulged a single word to a soul. Sir Alfred Butt and Mr. Alfred Bates, also on oath, declared emphatically that never at any time had they received the slightest information from Mr. Thomas in regard to Budget secrets.

Mr. J. H. Thomas made an unexpected appearance at the Tribunal on Tuesday morning, and again went into the witness-box to state that he had never seen or heard of some of the people who had mentioned his name in evidence on Monday.

"You will understand," he said to Mr. Justice Porter, "how painful it was to me when I read last night that people were quoting my name—people whose names I did not even know and had never heard of before."

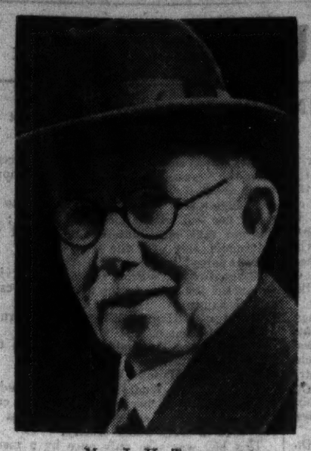
Explaining why he did not at once resign on hearing of the Budget rumours, Mr. Thomas told the Tribunal: "Carrying a great burden of responsibility, I was worried in my own mind as to whether I ought to resign. I consulted a friend—not a Cabinet Minister—and said: 'This is going to be very difficult for me to carry this burden.' He said: 'For God's sake, Jimmy, don't resign, as all manner of construction will be placed upon it.' I thought on the balance that that was sound advice, and I carried on, answering all my questions, and braved up. That was the only reason why I did not resign."

PROBABLE RESHUFFLE OF OFFICES

SIR SAMUEL HOARE MAY RETURN

Mr. Thomas's resignation is no surprise to politicians, says the Press Association Lobby Correspondent. Everybody at Westminster expected it, and for the reason which he himself gives—that the way in which his name and private affairs have been "bandied about" makes it impossible for him to continue as a member of the Government. He has many friends in all parties. Most of the members of the House of Commons will share the regret which Mr. Baldwin expresses, and will re-echo the Prime Minister's commendation of the loyalty with which Mr. Thomas has served the National Government.

Another vacancy in the Cabinet is expected to occur shortly through the retirement of Lord Monsell (First Lord of the Admiralty). This possibility has been foreseen for some time, and it has been assumed in many quarters that Sir Samuel Hoare then would re-enter the Government as First Lord of the Admiralty. A further suggestion, heard in the Parliamentary lobbies yesterday, is that Sir Samuel Hoare may return to the front bench, not as First Lord, but as Secretary of State for the Dominions, Mr. Malcolm Macdonald (the present Dominions Secretary) going to the Colonial Office in succession to Mr. Thomas, and Mr. Ormsby-Gore (First Commissioner of Works) going to the Admiralty. In some quarters, however, Mr. Ormsby-Gore is regarded as a likely choice for the vacancy at the Colonial Office. He has had a great deal of experience in the handling of Colonial affairs, having been Under-Secretary at the Colonial Office in 1922-'24, and again from November, 1924, to June, 1929.



Mr. J. H. Thomas.

EXECUTION OF MacKAY

LAST BID BY MR. EDEN

SEQUEL TO DARING PRISON ESCAPE

From Reuter's Correspondent.

SAN FRANCISCO, Friday.

ALEXANDER MacKAY, 29 years old native of Govan, Glasgow, who has been within sight of the gallows for the past four months, was executed here to-day at 7 p.m. (British summer time) for his part in kidnapping six warders after a prison break at San Quentin Penitentiary last January.

His execution, like that of his American companion, Joe Kristy, who went to the gallows at the same time, was fixed originally for February 28th. Since then there has been move after move, instigated not only by his lawyers, but also by Mr. Neil MacLean, M.P. for the Govan district of Glasgow, and the British Government, to save his life.

The last bid was made yesterday by Mr. Eden, who cabled to Mr. Cordell Hull, U.S. Secretary of State, asking him to exert his influence with Governor Merriam, of California, to grant a further stay of execution. But before he went to bed early this morning Governor Merriam said: "I see no reason yet to grant a third reprieve, but I am leaving it open until the last minute."

The last minute came and went. There was no further reprieve.

SUBMISSIVE

MacKay and Kristy were hanged simultaneously. They walked to the scaffold in submissive manner.

The chaplain of the prison, Father O'Meara, on leaving the death house, said that the condemned men's last words were: "We will see you later, Father."

The affair for which MacKay and Kristy were condemned to death was one of the most daring prison escapes in the history of the United States. On the afternoon of January 16th last year a band of five desperate convicts, armed with guns stolen from the prison armoury, concealed themselves in the grounds of the prison and seized two guards.

Marching their prisoners to the room of the warden, who was entertaining some members of the prison board, they forced him and his guests into a motor car, and drove off at high speed. Warden Holohan, who put up a desperate resistance, fell from the car as it dashed through the prison gates, fracturing his skull. Although badly injured, he later recovered.

THE PURSUIT

Armed guards and police at once set out in pursuit of the fleeing convicts, and a thrilling man-hunt followed. Assisted by observers in aeroplanes the pursuers succeeded in overtaking their quarry, and a desperate gun battle was carried on for miles along the road. The convicts kept up a rapid fire from their car, and used their hostages as shields in an attempt to prevent their shots being returned.

Eventually the police managed to stop the escaping car. Four of the convicts were taken alive; the fifth man had been shot dead.

PRINCESS'S CAR FOR IRISH RACE

SIX BUGATTIS IN BANGOR LIST

From Our Motoring Correspondent.

Princess Nina Mdivani has entered a Bugatti for the County Down Trophy motor race, which will be held on 20th June at Bangor. The car will be driven by Adrian Conan Doyle, who competed two years ago in the Leinster Trophy race at Skerries.

Entries for the Bangor race close at single fees on Monday, but already an interesting field is assured, with six Bugattis and seven M.G.'s, the latter ranging from supercharged R's to unblown J 2's.

Cross-Channel entrants of Bugattis include C. Mervyn White, who competed at Cork, and J. Morley.

There is an E.R.A. in the list, the driver being P. H. Whitehead, who finished third in last year's Limerick race.

Ivo Peters, who drove at Cork, has entered his Frazer-Nash, and Captain D. Taylor will drive R. O. Shuttleworth's supercharged Bugatti.

So far there are no Free State entries.

DEBT TO THE ROYAL NAVY

PROTECTION OF AFRICAN SHORES

From Reuter's Correspondent.

CAPE TOWN, Friday.

South Africa's debt to the Royal Navy for the protection of her shores was the subject of an important statement read to the House of Assembly this afternoon in reply to a motion by Mr. J. S. Marwick, a member of the Dominions Party, who proposed a plan providing for the admission of 500 South Africans to the Royal Navy, for which South Africa, he suggested, should make an annual maximum grant of £300,000 as a King George V. memorial grant to the Royal Navy.

Mr. Havenga, the Finance Minister, said that when the Union ceased to pay a cash contribution it took upon itself considerably more onerous obligations in connection with the expansion of the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve, the South African naval force, an up-to-date scheme for coastal defence, and special obligations relating to Simonstown. On the oil fuel tanks, store and workshop accommodation at Simonstown alone, he stated, over £300,000 had been spent, but this amount was unimportant compared with the recurrent and contingent liabilities, both in money and otherwise, which the agreement as a whole envisaged.

AN IRISH AIR TRANSPORT SERVICE

CONFERENCE OF CORK CITIZENS

PROPOSED DAILY FLIGHTS TO LONDON

GALWAY ALSO IN THE SCHEME

MR. F. LEO CRILLY, of Crilly Airways, Ltd., arrived in Cork yesterday from Galway by aeroplane, accompanied by Colonel Russell, late Chief of the Irish Free State Air Force; Lord Inchiquin, Mr. A. R. Taylor, Mr. G. S. Jones Evans, and Mr. T. J. Kenny, President of the Irish Tourist Association.

"This is the first real step to form an Irish air transport service," said Colonel Russell on the arrival of the party from Galway, where they held conferences with the Galway Chamber of Commerce on Thursday and discussed an air service to England.

Yesterday's visit to Cork was made with the object of including Cork in the scheme.

Colonel Russell stated that the idea was to have the service twice weekly between Galway and London and a daily service between Cork and London, provided the permission of the Government could be secured.

Within a week of getting this permission, he added, the services would be in operation.

The party were met at Farmers' Cross Aerodrome by Mr. J. Crosbie, Chairman of Cork Aero Club; Mr. C. J. Ryan, Hon. Secretary, Cork Aero Club, and other members.

THE CONFERENCE

In the afternoon the visitors attended an important conference, at which representatives of the Cork Harbour Board, the Cork Corporation, the Cork Branch of the Irish Tourist Association, the Cork Aero Club, the two local Chambers of Commerce, and other bodies attended.

Mr. James Crosbie presided, and those present included: Messrs. R. S. Anthony, T.D.; W. Desmond, T.D.; P. Monahan, City Manager, and members of the Cork Corporation; Mr. J. C. Rohan, Chairman, Cork Harbour Board; Mr. E. Gayer, General Manager, and several members of that body; Mr. P. Crowley, Chairman, Cork Branch Irish Tourist Association; Mr. E. Mahony, barrister-at-law; Senator Fitzgerald, Alderman F. J. Daly, Mr. John J. Horgan, solicitor, President, Cork Incorporated Chamber of Commerce; Mr. S. O'Leary, T.C.; Mr. J. A. O'Kelly, Mr. A. Healy, solicitor; Mr. C. Flynn, Secretary, Cork Branch Irish Tourist Association, and others.

On the invitation of Mr. J. Crosbie, who presided, Colonel Russell and Mr. Crilly detailed the scheme of air services with England.

IRISH-OWNED SERVICE

Colonel Russell said the ideal was the achievement of an Irish national air transport service, entirely owned and manned by Irishmen. They had endless offers from European companies, but the people in this country were not prepared to give away what would in future be a most valuable asset. Now Mr. Crilly, a successful Irishman, who had made a success of operating air services abroad, came along with this scheme of linking up Galway and Cork with London.

Colonel Russell said that he had examined the project minutely, and he was satisfied that it was perfectly sound. Mr. Crilly was prepared to form an Irish company which would have the benefit of his experience. The agreement entered into by the Government with Olley Airways, Ltd., permitted the scheme which Mr. Crilly suggested.

CORK'S SUPPORT NEEDED

Mr. Crilly said that the people of Cork would want to do something about the aerodrome if they wanted to be put on the air map or linked up with the rest of Europe. They could bring London within three or three and a half hours of Cork, and Berlin within five or six hours. The main point was that they wanted the support of the people of Cork and the Government, and in turn the Crilly Airways, Ltd., would provide the services.

The K.L.M. Dutch Air Lines, he added, were very interested in this service, and would use their influence to secure that the Dutch mails were put ashore here and taken by air to Croydon. If this came to pass it would be the first time that ships of the Dutch lines would call at the port of Cork.

His life's ambition, he said, was to run an Irish service, and he would ask them to support him locally and in the Dail.

FORGOTTEN CITIES

Mr. T. J. Kenny said that, following Thursday night's successful meeting in Galway, he thought that Cork should have its say. The modern method of transport was air travel, and the town—especially the seaport town—which neglected it would recede. Some time ago a scheme had been promulgated to link Dublin, Cork and Galway by air services with England, but the Inter-Departmental Committee to which the Government had referred the matter decided to link Dublin with the existing Isle of Man and England services, and that meant that Cork and Galway were forgotten. Cork and Galway must, therefore, pool their resources.

Galway had already decided to put up a nucleus guarantee of £3,000. The entire scheme would cost £100,000, and Crilly Airways were prepared to put up one-third of that amount if Cork similarly guaranteed a certain amount of money. Then both Cork and Galway would be definitely on the air map.

THE ONLY NEED

One of the twice weekly services from Galway would connect with the trans-Atlantic liners at that port. Both Cork and Galway services could be running within a month if the necessary financial support was forthcoming, and the political support to ensure that the scheme went through. All that was needed in that direction was that the Government should give it their blessing.

Lord Inchiquin said that the scheme would enormously assist the trade and commerce of the country.

SENATOR'S SUGGESTION

Senator Fitzgerald said that a sub-committee of public bodies in Cork had made certain progress towards the ultimate provision of an airport adequate for all eventualities. Under the Air Navigation Bill, to be introduced in the near future, powers would be taken to set up a national air service for the whole country, and he would suggest to Mr. Crilly to maintain contact with the Department until the coming into operation of the National Airways Company, and also maintain contact with the local committees in Cork and Galway.

Personally he could not see when that legislation was passed how any private company could be made a success. Rather than follow the idea of what had been done in Galway, he suggested that something in the nature of a citizens' committee should be set up to maintain contact with Mr. Crilly. The time might come when Mr. Crilly could operate his company with the national air services of the country.

Colonel Russell, replying to Senator Fitzgerald's statement, said it was entirely wrong to insinuate that this was an attempt to put one over an English company to grab the Anglo-Irish Aviation Loan. He detailed the routes and services proposed, and added that Senator Fitzgerald's statement was one of the most damaging he had ever heard. The mention of a citizens' committee sounded bad, and put Irish aviation for the 150th time on the long finger.

On the motion of Mr. J. C. Rohan, Chairman, Cork Harbour Board, seconded by Mr. R. S. Anthony, T.D., a resolution was carried unanimously: "That this meeting approves of the proposals put forward by Mr. Crilly, Colonel Russell, Lord Inchiquin and Mr. J. Crosbie, and gives them their fullest support."

CROSS-CHANNEL AIR SERVICES

THE EAGLE TO MAKE THE FIRST FLIGHT

By Our Air Correspondent.

One of the D.H. Dragon aircraft, which will operate on the cross-Channel air services next week, has already been registered with the Free State Department of Industry and Commerce. This machine—bearing the name "An Iolar" (the Eagle)—is to carry the official registration letters EI-ABI.

The Eagle is to be the first aeroplane to take off on the service to Bristol on next Wednesday, and, while it is the thirty-eighth aircraft to be registered in the Free State, it is the first big commercial aeroplane to be placed on the register.

Omnibus services from Dublin are being arranged to serve the machines arriving and departing from Baldonnel Aerodrome, and similar facilities will be available at the Bristol and Speke (Liverpool) airports.

Captain G. P. Olley, head of Olley Air Services, the company controlling Blackpool and West Coast Airways (who are operating the services in conjunction with Aerlingus Teoranta), is expected to arrive in Dublin early next week, and will remain here until he sees the first machine leave on its flight to Bristol. It is understood that further detail arrangements regarding the services were discussed in the Department of Industry and Commerce yesterday.

In the meantime, plans are being pushed ahead for the Air Transport Bill, which the Minister (Mr. Sean Lemass) announced would be introduced to the Dail in the near future.

SHANNON AS AIR PORT

TESTS ON LIMERICK AND CLARE COASTS

It was ascertained in Limerick yesterday that tests and levels were still being carried out in the Shannon at Baigh Castle, on the Limerick shore, and at Rynane, on the Clare shore, by engineering experts representing the Free State Board of Works and Imperial Airways, Limited.

At these two points the river is about two miles wide, and it appears to be the intention at a distance of about half a mile from the Clare shore from Devenish Island to build a breakwater to connect with the mainland. The surrounding slobland will, it is understood, be dredged, and will allow the seaplanes to taxi without difficulty into the Shannon. An aerodrome and hangar will also be erected.

These developments would go to show that the Shannon has virtually been selected for the Cross-Channel Atlantic air terminus, but inquiries instituted show that the experts have not yet finished their task, and will probably be engaged for some time to come in that direction.

THE CRILLY PROPOSALS

LORD INCHIQUIN'S VIEWS

Interviewed last night with regard to new air services between the Free State and Great Britain, Lord Inchiquin said that he had heard of the proposals made for services between Galway and London and Cork and London. He was aware, he said, that Mr. Crilly, the son of an Irishman of whom they were proud, had put forward the proposals. He also saw identified with them Irishmen who were held in high esteem in Ireland.

"I am always willing to do everything in my power for Ireland," he said; "and I identify myself with these proposals. I am convinced of their value, and believe that they will afford Ireland a great opportunity for the development of her tourist traffic, and thereby her national wealth. The ideal of an Irish national air transport organisation appeals to me and will have my support."

Interviewed last night in Dublin with regard to the project of an air service between London and Galway, Mr. T. J. W. Kenny, of Galway, said that the proposals had been received with enthusiasm in Galway.

Mr. W. J. Cahill, of Tuam Chamber of Commerce, and representatives of other towns in the County Galway, were also interested in the scheme, and he felt sure that many other Western towns would be forthcoming with financial support.

CYCLIST KILLED IN COUNTY MEATH

COLLISION WITH T.D.'S MOTOR CAR

From Our Correspondent.

TRIM, Friday.

A collision occurred last night at Kilmore, Enfield, between a motor car driven by Mr. Sean MacEoin, T.D., and two cyclists.

One of the cyclists, Michael Stewart, aged 24, a farmer's son, from Clonard, was killed instantly.

His companion, a young woman, sustained a fractured right arm and other injuries.

Mr. MacEoin was driving from Dublin to Longford at the time.

MONAGHAN YOUTH KILLED

Michael Martin, aged 17, son of Mr. James Martin, Rockcorry, Co. Monaghan, was killed instantly yesterday morning in collision with an ice-cream motor van driven by F. Malacco, Monaghan. The youth was cycling to a neighbour's house for milk.

THE BAGENALSTOWN CRASH

It was learned on inquiry at Bagenalstown Hospital that up to late last evening there had been no change in the condition of Messrs. Owens and Cosgrave, two of the four golfers seriously injured in Thursday's motor crash near this town. They were still in a very critical condition.

Their companions, Messrs. McGowan and Sullivan, are progressing satisfactorily.

DR. BALL IN THE BOX

SAD MARRIED LIFE

BOTH WIFE AND SON ABNORMAL

DEFENCE ENDED IN MURDER TRIAL

WHEN the case for the defence opened in the Ball trial yesterday, evidence was given that the accused youth, Edward Preston Ball, who pleaded not guilty to the charge of murdering his mother at 23 St. Helen's road, Booterstown, on February 17th, was mentally defective, and that he had showed signs of abnormality during the past five years.

Yesterday was the fifth day of the trial, and the case for the prosecution ended shortly after the Court had resumed. When the last State witness had been examined Mr. Fitzgerald, counsel for the defence, asked for a direction, but Mr. Justice Hanna refused it, saying that the State had produced evidence in support of the allegation that Ball had killed his mother.

After some legal argument, Mr. Fitzgerald addressed the jury, and said that Ball suffered from incipient adolescent insanity, but, at the same time, Mrs. Ball had been a likely subject for taking her own life.

While Mr. Fitzgerald was making his speech, Ball, who up to this looked very calm and self-possessed, broke down, but recovered himself in a short time.

PRISONER'S INJURIES

When the Court sat, the first witness called was Dr. Burke, of the Richmond Hospital, who had not been present in the court when his name had been called on the previous day. He explained that he had been detained at the hospital for an urgent operation.

Mr. Justice Hanna said that it was quite all right, as he knew that the doctor had been detained.

Dr. Burke said that, on Saturday morning, February 22nd, about 10 o'clock, he had examined Ball in the Richmond Hospital. He was in bed and was lying on his right side. He appeared to be sullen and stupid. He complained of a pain in his head and neck and in his right arm just above the wrist.

As the result of an X-ray examination, witness discovered that Ball had a fracture of the spinal column and a fracture above the right wrist joint. The fracture was through his sixth vertebrae, just behind the Adam's apple and just above the nape of the neck.

On the Sunday, Ball was still stupid, was lying on his right side, and answered questions only when asked. On Monday morning he was ever so much better—bright, cheerful and happy-looking.

In reply to Mr. Fitzgerald, the witness said that he thought Ball had fallen on his forehead. It was quite reasonable to suppose that on Friday night Ball was suffering from some concussion.

DR. RYAN RECALLED

Dr. Ryan, Dun Laoghaire, on being recalled, said that on his second visit to Ball on Friday, February 21st, he complained of pain between his shoulder blades, but did not mention his neck. Witness had him stripped naked in a bed and gave him a thorough examination. On that visit Ball had got over the shock of the fall and appeared to be ever so much better. He said: "I feel grand." Witness told the superintendent that Ball was fit to be removed.

In reply to Mr. Justice Hanna, the witness said that when Ball asked for his father and mother it indicated that he was suffering from some distress. He had been under great strain for a week and had been kept under close observation by the Guards.

Miss Joan Brennan stated that she was employed at Burnham's hairdressing establishment, Molesworth street, and had attended Mrs. Ball almost weekly for three years. On Saturday, 15th February, she gave Mrs. Ball a face massage and did her hair.

In reply to Mr. Maguire, the witness said that Mrs. Ball had very long hair, which was dressed in a "bun" behind each ear. She never wore pads either of her own or of artificial hair.

DIRECTION SOUGHT

The State case concluded at 10.50 a.m., and, the jury having retired, Mr. Fitzgerald asked for a direction.

He submitted that the State had failed to discharge the onus of proving either by direct evidence or irresistible inference that the deceased woman met her death at the hands of her son feloniously.

Mr. Fitzgerald then cited decisions bearing on the point, and, referring to reported Irish cases, said that it was a misfortune that the important Irish cases were not reported.

In reply, Mr. Maguire, counsel for the prosecution, cited the recent case of the Attorney-General against Edwards, and said that the jury had convicted, although there was nothing to establish that there had been a violent death.

Mr. Justice Hanna said that the State must establish that Mrs. Ball was dead; that she met her death by violent means, and that she was killed by the accused youth. In his opinion there was evidence by the State in support of these three factors, and he refused Mr. FitzGerald's application for a direction.

OPENING SPEECH FOR THE DEFENCE

In opening the case for the defence, Mr. FitzGerald said that both the jury and himself had a great responsibility in that case. It was very tragic that any boy of good education and good breeding should stand in the dock like the accused boy charged with the murder of his mother, but when they had coupled with that the fact that the boy standing in the dock was one who, on the evidence produced for the State and evidence which he would supplement, had been for the last five years a well-marked mental subject suffering from what the doctors would describe as incipient adolescent insanity, it was still more tragic.

Because the boy was mentally defective, the jury should not assume that he was the more likely to do the deed which was alleged against him. That was not the law. The more defective a person was the more was he entitled to the fair consideration of the jury, and his lordship would tell them so.

The boy's mental instability was inherited from his mother because his mother was for many years—certainly from soon after the boy's birth—mentally unstable and deranged. The lady, it was unfortunately his duty to state so, was one of the most likely subjects one could find for taking her own life.

MRS. BALL'S TEMPERAMENT

There never had been a case where a woman might fairly and more properly have taken her life as the case of poor Mrs. Ball. If she had reflected that night on the wreck she had brought to her own life and to her husband's life, as well as to the life of that boy, and had thought of taking her life, that poor lady would have done so. It would be his duty in that case to show good facts and good reasons why that woman, if it was permissible for her to take her life, would have done so in order to fade out of the life she was leading.

She had been married in 1902 or 1903. He could say that before the boy's birth that lady had been a most excitable and unbalanced creature. It had become so bad in 1926 and 1927 that she broke up her married home—her treatment of her husband and of this boy had been so bad. This husband was a well-known doctor, and one of her extravagances had been to go into his consulting rooms and insult him in the presence of his patients—insult him in every way that she could.

The boy at that time was eleven years of age, and he was sent in the most generous way by his father to one of the best schools in England—Sir Philip Sidney's school. He did not leave the school until 1932.

"THIS QUEER . . . MAD LADY"

That mentally-defective boy had been taken away from his father by that poor lady, and had been sent to Paris. The result of that experiment of the mother was tragedy and disgrace.

Another experiment in a London bank failed. In the summer of last year they found the boy still wandering around London, supported by an allowance from his mother, and an allowance which his father had to give him also.

"This queer, excitable, mad lady decided," said Mr. FitzGerald,, "that the boy should be trained in the Academy of Dramatic Art—this boy, who should have been kept away from all excitement. When she could not get her husband to do that, she encouraged him to go to the Gate Theatre."

Continuing, Mr. FitzGerald said that in her own home this lady was a cruel and nagging mother, who took the boy away from her husband, probably simply to annoy the husband. She did her best to ruin the boy's life, and counsel thought she had ruined it. The boy, as the evidence of the landlady in Upper Mount street had shown, was incapable of looking after himself. The mother had been warned by her husband, and had been given the opinion of eminent doctors about the condition of the boy.

That was the introduction to that fearful tragedy. On the 16th February they found that woman living alone in the little house in St. Helen's road with a boy whom she knew to be mentally deficient. There was no suggestion that the boy ever uttered a single word against his mother. His mother was much more likely to kill herself than to be killed by her son.

SCIENTIFIC EVIDENCE

A man could not be convicted on the evidence of these scientific gentlemen unless their evidence was such as to convince the ordinary man. He had seen experiments carried out, and it still remained a mystery to him how Dr. McGrath could say that a hatchet would be able to cut hair. He did not think there was any comparison between a corpse on a slab being operated on in this fashion and a living body.

How was it that Mrs. Ball did not scream if she was being murdered? Her husband would give evidence that she neither drugged nor drank, and there could be no suggestion that she could have been killed while in a comatose state.

He found it very difficult to deal with these speculations of scientists. This problem could not be dealt with on the basis of mathematical chances. This was not a twenty-to-one matter or a fourteen-to-one matter. Once they went into speculation they might as well be dealing with horse racing as human lives.

Mr. FitzGerald said that it depended on the decision of the jury whether Ball went to the gallows or left the court a free man.

Mr. Maguire said that that was a very improper remark to make to a jury.

Mr. FitzGerald—They know there is only one verdict they can find, either "guilty" or "not guilty."

CONDUCT OF THE GUARDS

Mr. FitzGerald referred to the statements made by Ball, and said that he did not know what the jury would think of the conduct of the Guards. He did not bother about the ordinary members of the Guards, but what did the jury think of the higher officers? He did not know what effect these gentlemen had on the criminal minds of the country, but he had to admit that they frightened him and terrified young Ball.

One of the reasons the Civic Guards were allowed to hand in statements that had been taken without caution, was because they were considered to be of such a high standard they could be trusted not to take an unfair advantage of accused persons. The Guards must live up to that reputation.

The conduct of the police officers in this case was like the House that Jack Built. There was first the Chief Superintendent from Bray; he was followed by Superintendent Dunlevy, and then the one member of the force who treated the boy with consideration, Superintendent O'Reilly, who came like a dove from the Ark with a cup of tea and then asked him to make a statement.

Was that the way to conduct a prosecution of a serious character? What could they expect from a boy having had four or five days of this, but an attempt to take his own life. That conduct could only result in one thing, that he should do what he did—throw himself from a window He supposed that was what they did in Chicago with gangsters.

IMPRESSION ON PUBLIC

Then, fresh from his bed, where he was lying with a broken neck, with the help of the police doctor he was taken to the Bridewell and asked to make another statement. This conduct would go a long way to dispose of the good impression the Guards had made on the public and on the Courts that they could be trusted to do what their predecessors, the R.I.C., could not be trusted to do.

Mr. FitzGerald said that if the jury came to the conclusion that Ball committed the act of which he was accused, but that he was insane, they must find the special verdict "guilty, but insane."

Dr. Richard R. Leeper, Medical Superintendent, St. Patrick's Hospital, Dublin, said that he had been consulting physician in lunacy to the Lord Chancellor. A considerable number of years ago Dr. Ball came to him as a friend and asked for advice about his son. He gave a detailed account of his son's conduct and the trouble he was in about him. The witness had never seen the boy, but he advised Dr. Ball to place him under the care of Dr. Rambaut in England, because he felt that the boy would be better away from his home surroundings.

After his conversation with Dr. Ball he had seen nor heard no more about him until he heard of the present occurrence. Since the boy's arrest he had visited the boy in the Richmond Hospital and had an extensive interview with him.

MENTAL ABNORMALITY

He formed the opinion that the boy was a case of very grave mental abnormality. The form it took was that he spoke in a way that no sane person would speak about his father and his mother, and his general outlook on life was completely abnormal for a boy of his age. He did not find any marked delusions or hallucinations, however.

The boy also was irrational and did not seem to realise the position he was in. A normal boy who was charged with murder would be under some pressure, but Ball did not seem to be.

Cross-examined by Mr. Maguire, the witness said that he had not been asked to look at the boy, but the history given by Dr. Ball was typical of the case, and he had no doubt as to what the boy was suffering from.

When he visited Ball at the Richmond Hospital the boy seemed to be hostile to both his father and mother He seemed to be very callous over the whole thing, and seemed to be indifferent to the fact that his mother was dead and that he was in a serious position.

HARLEY STREET WITNESS

Dr. Daniel Frederick Rambaut, a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin, and mental specialist in Harley street, London, said that he was the principal of St. Andrew's Hospital for the cure of mental diseases, Northampton, where there were 530 patients. In 1932 he had a conversation with Dr. Ball about his son, and he had a letter from Dr. Leeper stating that the boy was causing distress to his father, that he had attempted to commit suicide, necessitating the use of a stomach pump by the father.

In December, 1932, he examined Ball and found that he had the average intelligence of a boy of over sixteen years, as he then was, but he was deficient in moral sense and common sense. He talked quite readily and cheerfully about the question of suicide, but more or less promised that he would not attempt to commit suicide again. His affection for his father was deficient.

The witness recommended that the boy should be given a holiday in the South of England, after which he should be sent back to school, where discipline would be good for him.

In reply to Mr. Haugh, the witness said that the boy's condition could be improved with treatment. A person in the stage of the disease in which Ball was would know what he was doing. Ball could appreciate the difference between right and wrong in a modified degree, and knew that suicide was wrong.

PRISONER'S FATHER IN THE BOX

Evidence then was given by Dr. Charles Preston Ball, Pembroke road, Dublin, the father of the accused boy. The boy in the dock, he said, was his son, and was born on May 9th, 1916. He married Mrs. Ball in 1902, and, soon after the marriage, noticed signs of mental instability in his wife. The condition commenced at the birth of their first son, who now was thirty-one years of age, and became worse after the birth of the second son.

She would do the most extraordinary things. She would treat his patients at the door and tell them not to come to see him as he was no use and she would get her friends to telephone to him and send him down the country on wild-goose chases to find patients who were not there. For days she would nag him and then would not speak a word for days. She was an exceptionally strong woman.

He was forced to part from her and took the boy from her. Edward spent his holidays from school with him and never was allowed to see his mother. That was for the protection of the boy.

Mr. Justice Hanna asked what was the mother's attitude to the boy, and the witness replied: "It was very much the same as towards myself—violent and nagging at him, persecuting him one moment and afterwards quite the opposite.

BOY'S SUICIDE EFFORT

Describing the incident when his son had attempted to commit suicide, Dr. Ball said that the boy had a little room to himself near where his (the witness's) sister slept. The witness went to bed early one night and suddenly heard shrieks. He rushed to his son's room and saw his sister lying in a dead faint beside the open door of the boy's room and the boy standing there with his eyes glaring. His sister, who was great friends with the boy, was the person referred to as "Girlie."

When he got his sister recovered she gave him to understand that the boy had attempted to commit suicide. The boy then said that he had taken a big bottle of aspirin. He did not know whether he had taken 25 or 50 tablets. Witness managed to get them away with the aid of a stomach pump. He did not know the reason for the attempted suicide. That night they were the very best of friends.

At that time his son was seeing his mother, but always in the presence of his aunt. He later went with the witness's sister to Brighton, but was sent back to Shrewsbury again. At school he had shown not the slightest ability to pass an examination for any learned profession; was always changing his ideas as to what he would like to do after school and had thought of everything—even a train driver.

Mrs. Ball went around telling people that witness was very cruel and that he was keeping the boy away from her; and that she thought the boy was suffering from mother love starvation After that he allowed the mother to take the boy with her during the school holidays.

A VISIT TO BELFAST

He thought an outdoor life would be best for his son, and accordingly got in touch with a tea firm in London, who told him to send the boy to the Sireoco works in Belfast. The boy went to Belfast with his mother, the latter pretending to be very pleased with the idea. They kept idling about Belfast for three weeks and then the boy ran away.

Dr. Ball, continuing, said that after his son had been in Paris for three weeks it was arranged that he should send the landlady with whom the boy stayed a cheque for his board and lodging, but immediately afterwards he heard that the boy had to be got out of France to escape the clutches of the French police. He then met the boy in London and brought him to Mr. George Lewis, solicitor. Mr. Lewis was struck by the fact that the boy did not seem to care twopence about what was happening.

Mr. FitzGerald—What did he do from that on; what did he do in London?

The witness—He went to where his mother used to stay in Kensington and associated with indifferent characters.

Persons you did not approve of?—Very bad.

Further replying to Mr. FitzGerald, Dr. Ball said that his son stayed in London for about six weeks, and when he came back he talked about entering the Consular Service. It was eighteen months since his son had stayed with him, but the boy knew that he could come back at any moment.

Mr. FitzGerald—He never asked you?—He seemed indifferent about it.

HER PREMONITION

Witness said that his wife had frequently written him letters about their son. One written to him on a letter-card, which she handed to him in O'Connell street, read: "Dear Charlie, surely, for the first time in my life, I am afraid of everybody, and mostly of the future. I fear there is an approaching tragedy—I hope it is not the boy, Tim. Please do me a favour and go along and see 'Smiling Through' at the Savoy. I have just been there with Sheila. I hope Tim will always be grateful to you for what you have done." That letter was typical of many she had written.

Mr. FitzGerald—Did she ever complain to you that it was not safe to live with Tim?—No; I only heard those things.

Did you know at all last winter that she was suffering from a nervous breakdown and had to go to a hospital?—It happened so often I was not much surprised.

When last did you see her before she died?—I saw her in the distance a week before, and I saw her six months before to speak to.

Did you speak to her since Christmas last either about herself or about the boy?—No, and I was surprised at that. I wrote to her that I was leaving the house and said that I wanted to give her some furniture and photographs, and I got no reply.

SUICIDAL TENDENCIES

Before you had to separate did she ever do anything that would lead you to believe that she had suicidal tendencies?—Oh, yes.

When would she suffer from these symptoms?—She would spend two or three days without speaking to anyone.

This would follow periods of great elation?—Yes.

She could be very gay?—Yes.

And make herself very pleasant?—Yes, she could be very cool to me and the boy and go out and people would think she was charming almost in the same hour.

Mr. Maguire—Apart from what went on in your home she was charming to everyone she met?—Yes.

She might be described as a very charming woman?—That is a matter of opinion.

You do not think so now?—I am sorry I ever thought so.

But you married her. You thought so then?—Yes

Had she a number of friends down to the end?—I do not know how many she had. I knew she had a few friends, but I did not know who they were.

There is evidence here that she had a number of good friends, lady friends. Do you agree with that?—That is a phrase I object to strongly.

Surely you do not object to Mrs. Allen or Miss Cashin?—No, I never heard of these people.

RIDICULOUS IDEAS

They have been examined here?—I do not mean them at all.

Did your wife and you take sides over these boys?—We never had any quarrel about the boys. I always consulted her, and, although she suggested all sorts of most ridiculous things, I gave in to her practically every time.

Of course, you had ideas of your own?—Yes.

She also had her ideas?—She had ideas that changed about every week.

You know, of course, that there is nobody to speak for her here, to put her view of these quarrels to the jury?—Yes.

Ultimately you separated in 1926?—About 1927.

Mr. Maguire asked to be shown some of the letters that had been referred to, and, having seen them, said that they were all friendly letters.

The Witness—Oh, yes.

Mr. Maguire—They are all addressed "Dear Charlie," and are signed "Vera."

The Witness—Some are friendly and some are not.

You know, of course, your wife's account of the unhappiness—you knew that she was telling people a completely different story to what you have told my lord and jury?—I am not surprised to hear it—I did not know it.

About herself and her separation from you?—Oh, she told the most appalling lies.

You call them appalling lies?—Yes.

During the time that you lived apart was she provided for?—Yes.

She had means?—About £400 a year.

You knew that she worked in connection with the "sweeps?"—No, I did not know a word about it.

I suggest that you were rather glad to get rid of her and let her look after herself; you did not take much interest in her?—I was extremely sorry over the separation.

You parted with regret?—Yes.

Personal regret?—From every point of view. It was the last thing in the world that I cared should happen.

Mr. Justice Hanna—What was the crucial cause of the separation?

The Witness—I would rather leave that your lordship.

Mr. Justice Hanna—Very good.

Mr. Maguire—Would you be surprised to hear that she told her friends you were cruel to her?—I am not surprised. There was not one word of truth about cruelty.

This boy was seen only once by a mental specialist; that was the only occasion?—It was the only time I brought him. I suspected what was wrong and those suspicions were reinforced by what Dr. Leeper had said.

TERRIBLY DEPRESSED

During the years 1902-1927 she was never examined by a mental specialist?—I did not know; she went to a great many doctors. She was in a terribly nervous state, and she was always seeing doctors because of this nervous state.

Did it ever occur to you that her nervous condition was attributable to your conduct?—Certainly not.

She might have thought it was?—She could not; I do not believe she did.

When did you last speak to her?—About six months before. She was in a terrible state of depression and said that her nerves were going. She was in a nervous condition.

In reply to other questions, the witness said they were talking on that occasion about the boy's condition. He told her that the boy should be put under restraint, and she said that she would not hear of it.

Mr. Maguire—Is it your evidence that the boy has a weak mind?—Yes, certainly. He has done extraordinary things for many years.

His mind is so weak that he would take his mother's life?—He was not that sort, but he would do the most extraordinary things.

COMPLAINED OF NAGGING

Did you ever hear him express any ill-will towards his mother?—No, I do not think so; he used to complain about her nagging. He was very good to her.

Were you aware that your wife was afraid to stay in the house?—I did not know that.

Replying to questions concerning his son's visit to his house on February 17th, Dr. Ball said that the boy had come up for the money and he gave him £3. When he had heard that Mrs. Ball was missing on that day he thought that she was "up to one of her tricks to persecute him."

Dr. Gerald Cecil Dockery, Pathologist to Dr. Steevens's Hospital, said that when he saw the hatchet there were slight traces of human blood on it. He had seen hair cut—it was in very exceptional cases—by a razor, but it looked as if it had been cut by a blunt instrument. It would be possible that Mrs. Ball cut her throat with a razor blade.

In reply to Mr. Haugh, the witness said that it was consistent with the evidence that Mrs. Ball could have been struck down by outside violence, and that the hatchet could have been stained by its being used by a human hand. He thought that Mrs. Ball being hit with an axe was the most probable. Mrs. Ball had lost half of her life blood on the floor, but she could have made her way to the bed and covered herself with the bedclothes. The hairs found could have been cut with an axe.

A KLEPTOMANIAC

Dr. Dorothy Bennett said that she had been assistant to Dr. Moorhead for ten years and also carried on a private practice. Mrs. Ball had been her patient for eight years, having come originally to get injections for varicose veins. Then the witness had seen her about once a month. She also treated her for symptoms in connection with the change of life, which was a serious phase, especially in a person subject to neurasthenia. Mrs. Ball was very excitable.

She used to give Mrs. Ball "lifts" in her car and after such occasions witness missed money from her bag. She came to the conclusion that Mrs. Ball was a kleptomaniac. On three occasions when she watched her she saw Mrs. Ball taking money from her bag.

Mr. FitzGerald—Was she one of those ladies who in a fit of depression would become subject to suicidal propensities?—Worry might influence her.

This concluded the evidence for the defence, Mr. FitzGerald stating that he would not call the accused youth.

Dr. W. J. Coyne, Medical Officer, Mountjoy Prison, said that he had the accused youth under observation in the prison, but could see no signs of insanity, but, from the history of the case and from what he had heard in the court, there was a definite case of adolescent instability, a disorder that affected people between the ages of seventeen and twenty-four years. On two occasions the accused youth had wept or exhibited sorrow.

Mr. FitzGerald—If this boy were put in an empty house and his mother committed suicide it would have a deleterious effect on his mental condition. He would be a bad subject to undergo a strain of that kind?

The Witness—There would be different reactions.

It is quite possible that he would hide the body of his mother to save his mother's name!—Yes.

This concluded the evidence.

Mr. Hooper and Mr. Haugh then addressed the jury. Mr. Hooper spoke for a little over half-an-hour and Mr. Haugh for about an hour.

When he had concluded, the Court rose until 10.30 a.m. to-day.

OBITUARY

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL H. R. GOODMAN, D.S.O.

Lieutenant-Colonel Harry Russell Goodman, D.S.O., late Royal Ulster Rifles, died suddenly at his home, Fairy House, Totland Bay, Isle of Wight, on Thursday night. While he was training a young horse the leading rein caught round his leg and he fell. He did not appear to be hurt, but later was taken suddenly ill, and died, apparently from a heart attack following the shock of the accident.

Colonel Goodman was awarded the Distinguished Service Order for his service in France, where he commanded the Second Battalion, Royal Irish Rifles, for two years, and was severely wounded. After the war he commanded the same battalion, then the Royal Ulster Rifles, in India.

On Merit Alone

DUM DUM NOTE ISSUED

ITALY REPEATS CHARGES

WITH PHOTOGRAPH OF 1913 LABEL

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.

GENEVA, Friday.

DESPITE categorical denials by the British Government and by the British firms concerned, the Italian Government, in a Note to the League, issued to-day repeats its charges concerning the supply by British companies of dum dum bullets to the Abyssinian Army.

The Note, which is signed by Signor Suvich, the Italian Under-Secretary of State, says:—"Marshal Badoglio informed the Italian Foreign Office on April 26th, 1936, that in the Lake Ashangi battle and in the subsequent pursuit about 2,000 dum dum bullets had up to that date been captured, some of which, it was possible to ascertain, had been manufactured in England."

Attached to the Italian Note are photographs of dum dum bullets stated to have been found on the battlefield or on Abyssinian prisoners. Some of these bullets are marked on the base "K.C. VI." and one "E.C. II."

"These marks," says the Note, "are the same as those noted on the bullets manufactured by Kynock, of Birmingham, and Eley Bros., of London."

It is remarked here that the existence of 2,000 dum dum bullets, admittedly used for sporting purposes in Abyssinia, is not surprising, since many thousands of rounds of this type of ammunition must have been taken to Abyssinia over a period of years for hunting and sporting purposes.

It was pointed out that a label referred to in the Italian Note had not been used since 1913.

ITALIANS SUSPEND EXPULSION ORDER

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.

ROME, Friday.

Signor Suvich, the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, to-day received the Comte de Chambrun, the French Ambassador, and informed him that the Italian Government had decided to suspend the order of expulsion from Abyssinia issued against the 80 year old Mgr. Jarosseau, the French missionary Bishop of Harar, who has lived in Abyssinia for over 40 years.

DUBLIN FLAG FOR NEW YORK MAYOR

PRESENTATION BY TRADE DELEGATES

"IRISH TIMES" SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

NEW YORK, Friday.

An enthusiastic scene was witnessed at the City Hall to-day when Mr. T. F. Laurie presented Mayor La Guardia with an official municipal flag from the Lord Mayor of Dublin to commemorate the opening of a direct steamship service from New York to the Irish Free State capital.

Mr. Kevin Kenny explained that the poplin flag was of Irish manufacture. Mr. Laurie's speech was cheered by the assembly of New York high officials who were present.

The Mayor, in reply, said he had followed the developments taking place in Irish industry for a long time, expressing his admiration of Mr. de Valera's leadership.

President de Valera, he said, had discussed with him his plans years before he had taken office. He expressed admiration for the courageous enterprise of the industrial exhibition in New York harbour, and suggested that there would be no better place for such industrial exhibitions than the great World Fair to take place in New York in 1939.

He was not in a position, he said, to issue an official invitation to foreign nations to participate in the Fair, as he was only the Mayor. That invitation must come from the American State Department.

Messrs. Laurie and Kenny assured the Mayor that they had not waited for invitations. They had already drawn up plans for an exhibit at the Fair, and would recommend it to the Irish Free State Government.

Speaking in Gaelic and English, Mr Laurie invited the Mayor to Dublin, and promised him an Irish welcome.

In an interview with the Irish Times representative after the ceremony of presentation, the Mayor said he hoped to come to Ireland, but not for the Horse Show, which was calling so many Americans this year, as he did not share this great interest in horses. But he was concerned with the welfare and progress of human beings, and the success of the Irish nation in particular. He mentioned the good news he had heard of improved housing conditions and industrial progress to stem unemployment.

BAN ON COMMUNIST MEETINGS

SUGGESTION BY LIMERICK PRIEST

FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.

WATERFORD, Friday.

Addressing the members of the Mary Immaculate Sodality at Mount Sion, Waterford, the Rev. Coleman O'Driscoll, O.S.A., Limerick, said that it was well-known that in recent times Communists had made an effort to shelter under the banner for which brave men and true Catholics had died. It would be well if it were made legally impossible for professed Communists to address public meetings in Ireland; and, certainly, it was not becoming to find them present at a demonstration whose object was to honour the memory of brave Irishmen. Was it not alarming to think, he asked, that men could stand up in the City of Dublin and be applauded for slighting, and even insulting, the Bishops of Ireland? The public Press, a few weeks ago, had a report of a meeting in Dublin where the Bishop of Waterford was openly insulted, and such insult appeared to have been received meekly by the listening crowd. He appealed for loyalty to the Hierarchy, not merely on occasions of processions or crisis, but in all words and actions.

EXTERNAL TRADE OF FREE STATE

RETURNS FOR FOUR MONTHS

FIFTY per cent. of the Irish Free State's imports during the four months, January to April last, came from Great Britain; while five-sixths of the Free State exports went to Great Britain during the same period, with an adverse balance against the Free State in that particular market of £1,452,260.

Imports from Great Britain during the four months totalled £6,704,641, and exports to that country £5,193,776.

Imports from Northern Ireland were worth £190,040, while Free State exports to the six counties for the four months' period totalled £540,502.

From "other countries" the four months imports were worth £5,580,308, while exports to "other countries" are returned at £542,067.

The totals for the four months' period are: Imports, £12,521,320; exports, £6,366,645.

In the twelve months ended in April last the total external trade of the Free State was £58,610,467. Imports totalled £37,953,535, while exports, plus re-exports totalled £20,656,932. These figures show a visible adverse balance of £17,296,603, or nearly three million less than in the year ended April, 1935.

THE "OTHER COUNTRIES"

The only large country outside the United Kingdom in which anything like a balanced trade took place during the four months under review was Germany, who sent goods to the value of £481,586, and received in exchange goods value for £161,581.

Imports from the United States of America totalled £1,234,545, and exports to that country £79,556.

There were heavy imports from Australia (£514,617), Canada (£429,870), and British India (£345,559), but the exports were light: To Australia £3,872, to Canada £10,717, and to British India £13,705. The Argentine Republic sent goods to the value of £253,984 and received £1,175 worth. Imports from France amounted to £199,269, and exports to that country £13,870, while imports from Italy totalled £17,362 and exports £79.

Imports from the Netherlands totalled £144,100, and Free States exports £26,271. Spain sent goods worth £130,655, and took in exchanges goods valued £5,286. Russia sent goods worth £42,314 and only purchased £4 worth during the four months, while imports from the Dutch West Indies totalled £115,176, exports thereto amounting to £139.

SOME OF THE IMPORTS

Imports of fresh or frozen fish during the four months ended April last amounted to £76,753, over £5,000 more than for the same period last year. Wheat imports advanced by over £200,000 to £862,512, while maize fell by £126,000 to £220,672. Wheaten flour imports totalled £21,751 against £53,318 during the same period last year.

There was a falling off in imports of fruit, but more onions were imported, to the increased value to nearly £3,000, the total value being £25,068.

Imported beer and ale increased from £43,174 to £78,323, while imports of unstemmed tobacco increased from £101,348 to £400,629 during the four-month period.

Coal imports, as compared with the same period last year, increased from £770,197 to £1,034,770. Imports under the heading of machinery and electrical goods and apparatus increased from £788,500 to £917,916, while motor vehicle chassis, imported as parts, increased from £210,872 to £327,143. The value of cotton piece goods imports fell from £426,934 in 1935 to £362,705 during the four months January-April, although the quantity was increased by over a million square yards. Imports of wearing apparel generally show a decline, although certain items are up as compared with the same period in 1935, the total value of these imports being £578,827.

While the four months' imports of hides and skins increased from £1,001 to £34,460, those of sole or insole leather dropped from £118,469 to £74,124. Upper other than patent imports increased from £87,199 to £103,091.

THE EXPORTS

Free State live stock exports for the four months ended April last totalled £2,585,953, as against £2,119,653 for the same period last year. Of these amounts £1,958,293 represents cattle this year, as against £1,557,200 last year—a direct result of the new coal-cattle pact.

There was a big advance in exports of dead rabbits, which were valued at £17,767, as against £283 last year.

Milk exports fell from £3,267 to £2,040, but the exports of butter increased in value from £110,555 to £120,909, although the quantity exported was substantially less.

Exports of cream have almost doubled, while their value has increased from £19,750 to £33,060.

Among cereals and feeding-stuffs for animals it will be seen that dried beet pulp exports have advanced from £18,069 to £26,014. Exports of potatoes, other than seed, have increased from £7,323 to £90,195 for the period under notice. Seed potatoe exports increased in value from £8,522 to £17,917.

Exports of textiles, except apparel, totalled £350,055, as against £363,364 during the same period last year.

FROM "THE TIMES"

(BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT.)

MR. THOMAS RESIGNS

The Times says in a leading article to-day:—The resignation by Mr. J. H. Thomas of the office of Secretary of State for the Colonies is an event that must have been anticipated by all who followed the proceedings of the Tribunal of Inquiry into the supposed Budget leakage. This is not to say that the Tribunal's findings are, in any sense, prejudged, still less that Mr. Thomas makes any admission that blame for any leakage rests upon him. He resigns in honourable obedience to a broader constitutional convention. As the basis of political authority has grown wider, the standard of conduct exacted of Ministers of the Crown has grown, and should grow, ever more severe, and it is now impossible for a statesman to hold office when, in Mr. Thomas's words, his name and private affairs have been bandied about in an unhappy context.

By the searching methods of judicial inquiry to which Mr. Thomas frankly and honourably submitted himself, much more of his personal history has inevitably been noised abroad than could be directly related to the special subject of inquiry. He has been shown to have indulged in transactions which are far removed from any breach of the law, which in a private citizen would be quite innocuous, but which in a Cabinet Minister are bound to rank as injudicious. In great positions, such as Mr. Thomas has occupied, a man not only cannot afford to be indiscreet himself; he is likely to suffer even from the indiscretions of others. Members of Mr. Thomas's family and immediate circle have admitted their participation in dealings that may be perfectly innocent in themselves, and yet when carried out by the close associates of a Minister cannot but involve his name. The justice or injustice of this association is not here in issue; the sentiment itself is enough to impair that absolute confidence in statesmen on which the whole fabric of popular government depends. A Minister who has incurred it at once ceases, in Mr. Thomas's words, to be a source of strength to the Administration in which he serves, and the custom of the Constitution, which sets the nation before the individual, expects him to resign.

TUBERCULOSIS IN IRELAND

MEDICAL OFFICER ON ITS ORIGIN

THE EARLY STEAMBOAT AND FAMINE BLAMED

THE tuberculosis scourge, which is now being vigorously attacked in this country, was originally carried into this country from industrial centres in England.

This is the belief of Dr. J. A. Harbison, County Medical Officer of Health in the County Dublin. He expressed it yesterday, when he concluded his evidence before the Local Government (Dublin) Tribunal in the Four Courts.

Dr. Harbison told the Tribunal that in this country, as compared with England, one found a higher proportion of acute and subacute cases of tuberculosis than of chronic cases, and where one found in a country a higher proportion of acute cases it usually indicated that the disease was of more recent development than it was in the country where the more chronic types existed. Chronic types were due to a slowly-gathered resistance to the disease.

STEAMBOATS AND FAMINE

In Ireland, with its lack of resistance, there had been a very high known rate of tuberculosis mortality as far back as fifty years ago, when the records were established. It was his impression that the advent of the steamboat, combined with the effects of the Famine in this country, had much to do with the beginnings of the disease in Ireland; for a large percentage of the population who sought a livelihood in England, under horrible industrial conditions, became infected, and returned to this country with the infection, spreading it among a population which, up to that time, had been mainly agricultural, and had been free of disease. "Galloping" consumption was, consequently, still more evident in Ireland than in other countries.

Infant mortality, the witness said, was fairly heavy, and he had a good deal of trouble with boarded-out children—particularly in the southern section of the county. In some instances children were boarded-out in homes that were overcrowded, and he had to have some of them removed. A good deal more care could be taken in the selection of homes for those children.

SEASIDE RESORTS

Referring to the conditions at the seaside resorts, he stated that the present bathing facilities at Dun Laoghaire were hopelessly out of date, and the development of the district as a popular health resort would be greatly expedited if steps were taken to secure an improvement in this direction. The facilities existing there now might have been tolerated forty years ago. Growing numbers of visitors were not adequately provided for the baths, and the water should be chemically treated.

The development of Howth would benefit Dublin also, and he could not see why a small community in Howth should be asked to bear the cost of improvement for the benefit of the health of Dublin.

Concluding, Dr. Harbison agreed that the public required education in health matters. Communally, they wanted to establish health as a habit, that being the best means towards the prevention of disease and premature death

MILK PRODUCTION

That the Dublin County Veterinary Department was the best in the Free State was stated by Mr. J. A. Flynn, Veterinary Inspector, Dublin County Council. The county had a large number of first-class dairies and excellent quality milk produced. The standard of milk production had shown a remarkable improvement, due, he believed, to the advance gained through reorganised services and by instruction and education. The growth of tuberculin-tested herds had been rapid. It was estimated that these herds comprised 1,500

DUBLIN CIRCUIT COURT

CHILD STRUCK BY PLASTER

(BEFORE JUDGE DAVITT.)

Richard Hughes, a minor, suing by his father, Patrick Hughes, labourer, 15 Blackhall place, claimed £100 compensation from Patrick Dowling, licensed vintner, 1 Francis street, for personal injuries caused by the fall of a lump of mortar plaster from the wall of the defendant's house on September 2nd, 1935. The child was in a perambulator accompanied by his mother when the accident happened, and she, too, was hit by the falling plaster, and sought compensation.

The defence was that the building was not owned by the defendant.

The Judge gave a decree for £10 in respect of the injury to the minor, with costs, and dismissed the mother's claim.

Mr. A. Lynn (instructed by Mr. C. B. W. Boyle) appeared for the plaintiffs; Mr. R. Greene appeared for the defendant.

CYCLIST COMPENSATED

Patrick McKenna, St. Jarlath's road, Cabra, sued Arthur Mahon, Palmerston road, to recover £300 damages for personal injuries and loss sustained by him in consequence of a collision which occurred between his bicycle and the defendant's motor car on the North Circular road on September 6th, 1935.

When the case was called, Mr. F. Sherry (instructed by Mr. L. Trant McCarthy), for the plaintiff, stated that a settlement had been arrived at, in accordance with which the defendant would pay the plaintiff £80, and costs.

The Judge received the consent and made it a rule of Court.

Mr. Sean Ryan (Messrs. James O'Connor and Co.) appeared for the defendant.

SWORDS PREMISES

Mrs. Jane Derham, North street, Swords, Co. Dublin, appealed from the order, dated October, 1935, made by the Dublin Board of Health, directing the vacation and demolition of two dwellinghouses in North street, Swords, occupied separately by Kevin Toole and Patrick Ferris.

Mr. F. Sherry (instructed by Messrs. Cochrane and Co.), for the appellant, stated she had been advised by her solicitors that, if she expended a reasonable sum in repairs, the Board might be satisfied.

Mr. Art O'Connor (instructed by Mr. Early), for the Board, said that if Mrs. Derham undertook to carry out the repairs as required by Mr. Russell the Order might be quashed.

The Judge said that if she undertook to expend £80 on the repair of the two cottages to satisfy the requirements of the Board the Order would be quashed.

The case was adjourned in order to give the appellant an opportunity of considering the matter.

CUSTODY OF DUBLIN CHILDREN

(BEFORE MR. JUSTICE O'BYRNE.)

Mr. Cawley (instructed by Mr. Dermot J. Hanly) applied ex parte on behalf of William Francis Lynch, of Belvedere place, Dublin, for a conditional order of habeas corpus directed to Mrs. Mary Josephine Lynch, to produce in court William Francis Lynch, and Rita Bernadetta Lynch, infants, to be given into the custody of the applicant, her husband.

Mr. Lynch stated in an affidavit that he was married to Mary Josephine Lynch in the Catholic Church of St. Vincent de Paul, Marino, Dublin, on 1st September, 1932, and the two infants, who were their children, were baptised as Catholics in Westland Row Church. On 16th July, 1935, his wife went back to live with her mother and took the child Rita Bernadetta. After persuasion she returned on 3rd October, but on 15th January of this year she left home again to reside with her mother, and on that occasion she took the two children with her. She had remained away ever since, and had kept the children and refused to return.

Mr. Cawley said that the father had made suitable arrangements for the care of the children.

Mr. Justice O'Byrne granted a conditional order of habeas corpus.

BROTHER'S "WANDERING DISPOSITION"

(BEFORE MR. JUSTICE SULLIVAN.)

Mr. Budd (instructed by Messrs. Fetherstonhaugh and Carter) applied on behalf of Martin Brady, farmer, Lackenmore, Killeigh, Tullamore, for an order that the applicant be at liberty to apply for a grant of letters of administration of the goods of his brother, Patrick Brady, as in case of intestacy, and that the applicant might be at liberty to state the death of Patrick, not positively, but to the best of his information and belief.

Counsel said that Patrick was "of a somewhat wandering disposition," and sometimes remained away for periods of from six to twelve months, but rarely allowed six months to pass without communicating with the family. He had not been heard of since 1924. Michael, another brother, died in 1925, intestate, and Patrick would be entitled to a share in his estate. No communication was received from Patrick in reply to an advertisement for persons claiming an interest in the estate.

Mr. Justice Sullivan granted the application.

PORTMARNOCK HOTEL LICENCE

(BEFORE MR. JUSTICE O'BYRNE.)

An application was made by Mr. Geoghegan, K.C., with whom was Mr. J. P. Murnane (instructed by Mr. James Fagan), on behalf of Mrs. Kathleen Nealon Walsh, of Upper Mount street, Dublin, for an order in the nature of a writ of certiorari and mandamus, to bring into the High Court for the purpose of being quashed an order of the Dublin Circuit Court refusing her application for a licence for the sale of intoxicating liquor at her hotel at Carrickhill, Portmarnock, and directing the Circuit Court Judge to grant the licence.

Mr. Justice O'Byrne granted a conditional order of certiorari and mandamus.

ACCIDENT CASES SETTLED

(BEFORE MR. JUSTICE O'BYRNE.)

Settlements were received and made a rule of Court in each of the following cases:—

In the case of Desmond Dempsey, suing by his father, Michael Dempsey, of St. Joseph's road, Dublin, against Messrs. Maher and Murphy, building contractors, Aughrim street, Dublin (injuries to the head of a five years old boy by a section of metal railings falling upon him), the consent provided for the payment of £100 to the plaintiff, together with a sum for medical fees and hospital expenses, and a further sum for costs.

In the case of George Cooper, of Lord Edward street, Ballina, the plaintiff in an action against Francis McHale, of Kincon, Co. Mayo (damages for death of wife, knocked down by motor on 26th November, 1935—Payment of £170 and a sum for costs to the plaintiff, the £170 to be divided between the plaintiff and his daughter, a minor.

In the case of Arthur Fitzpatrick, Kimmage road, West, Kimmage, Dublin the defendant in an action brought by Joseph Plummer, St. Michael's terrace, Blackpitts, Dublin (damages for injuries caused by having been struck by the defendant's motor at Clanbrassil street, Dublin, on 23rd September, 1935)—Payment of £45 to the plaintiff, with money for medical expenses and costs.

The appearances were:—Mr. Micks (instructed by Mr. R. I. Archer); Messrs. Hoey and Denning, solicitors. Lord Hemphill, with whom was Mr. Carson (instructed by Mr. P. J. Mulligan). Mr. Sean Ryan, solicitor, and Mr. Herman Good, solicitor.

Don't worry about Public Liability. Get a Norwich Union Insuranec Policy.—J. G. Aston, Mgr., 63 Dawson street, Dublin.
—(Advt.)

Mr. Francis Christopher Crozier, of Drumbrick Ederney, Co. Fermanagh, who died on 10th January last, left personal estate in Great Britain and Northern Ireland valued at £4,543.

DUBLIN OSTEOPATH'S PRACTICE

"TESTIMONIALS" FROM PATIENTS

Arthur Lewis, alias Charles Baxter, alias Leonard Manfield, described as an osteopath, of Herbert place, Dublin, again appeared on remand in the Dublin District Court yesterday, before Mr. Justice Hannan, charged with having obtained £10 from Michael Comerford, of Bullock Hill, Castlecomer, Co. Kilkenny, with intent to defraud. Mr. D. O'Donovan prosecuted on behalf of the Chief State Solicitor, and Mr. Felix Sherry (instructed by Mr. Herman Good, solicitor) defended.

Lawrence Kavanagh, aged 76, of Lower Baggot street, Dublin, said that in November, 1934, he went to Baxter in 54 Fitzwilliam square for foot treatment. Baxter asked for a fee of 30s. a week, but Kavanagh told him he could only pay 2s. 6d., and eventually Baxter agreed to treat him for nothing and to pay him 18s. per week if he would attend and allow the other patients to see him. Baxter asked for his permission to write a letter to the newspapers and the witness agreed, Baxter paying him for his photograph which he inserted. Later he saw the advertisements in the papers and identified his photograph in several issues of the Evening Herald, but said that the letter which appeared in the advertisement was not the one he wrote.

Cross-examined by Mr. O'Donovan, Kavanagh said that his condition after three weeks of treatment was the same, if not worse. He used to sit in a chair and when Baxter came in he had to walk up and down to show the other patients how well "he was getting on."

Mr. Sherry pointed out that the name of the orthopædic consultant in the paper was "Mr. Arthur Stannard," and Kavanagh replied that he had sent no letter to Mr. Stannard.

Mrs. Elizabeth McGauran, of Ellis's quay, Dublin, the widow of a medical doctor, said that, in reply to an advertisement, she brought her daughter to Baxter for treatment. This seemed to be beneficial, and after some time he asked her would she mind if he published a letter from her in the Press. She agreed, provided that the letter was only a few lines, but she did not write the "big letter" that appeared. She had never mentioned anything about undue pressure on her daughter's spine, nor about "painful bunions and swollen ankles," her daughter's only trouble in this respect being tired feet, for which Baxter had given her foot supports.

Cross-examined by Mr. Sherry, Mrs. McGauran said that she did not dictate the letter. She gave a few particulars of her case to a gentleman at 54 Fitzwilliam square, and that was all she knew about it.

The further hearing of the case was adjourned until June 2nd.

THE PADDOCKS ANNUAL BULL SALE

For their 72nd annual bull sale at The Paddocks, Limerick, Messrs. Wm. B. Fitt and Co., auctioneers, had a heavy entry. The catalogue, numbering 247, included some Aberdeen-Angus, Hereford and non-pedigree dairy shorthorn bulls. The order of sale, following the usual custom, opened with the three-year-old and two-year-old bulls. The reputation enjoyed by The Paddocks in the matter of bull sales was manifested by the exceedingly large and representative attendance. Business throughout the day was active and well sustained to the finish, few bulls being passed through the "ring" unsold. There were some exceedingly useful and high-class animals in both classes, and colour, class and quality were well represented. It was the general opinion that the class of bulls this year was of a higher standard all round than in recent years. This improvement was particularly marked in yearlings—a most excellent lot of young bulls of an even grade. Demand all round was good and firmly sustained to the end of the sale. The choicer lots drew keen competition, rates showing a marked increase on last year's prices. The sale was the most successful held at The Paddocks for many years. The Great Southern Railways Company afforded the usual facilities for dispatch. Top price for two-year-olds was obtained by Mr. F. Cahir, Buncraggy, Ennis, at 27½ guineas, the purchaser being Mr. E. Rafferty, Oola. Mr. W. Gleeson, Smithfield, Nenagh, ran him close at 25 guineas, the purchaser being Mr. G. Watson, Milford, Charleville. Best lots made from 18 to 27½ guineas, ordinary bulls from 10 to 17 guineas. Top price in yearlings was obtained by Mr. W. Gleeson, Smithfield, Nenagh, at 28 guineas, the purchaser being Mr. P. Byrnes, Ballynoe, Ballingarry, the runner-up being Mr. Robert O'Dea, Drombanna, Limerick, at 25 guineas; the purchaser was Mr. J. Fitzgerald, Kilmacow, Kilkenny. Choice yearlings realised from 17 to 25 guineas, ordinary from 9 to 16 guineas. Four Aberdeen-Angus bulls realised from 16 to 25 guineas; five Hereford bulls 20 to 23 guineas; five non-pedigree dairy shorthorn bulls 10 to 17½ guineas.

AUCTION SALES

MESSRS. BATTERSBY AND CO.

At their property salerooms on Thursday next Messrs. Battersby and Co. will offer two attractive properties for sale with possession—55 Rathgar avenue, Rathgar, shop, residence and very large dairy yard attached, and "Templeville," 66 Booterstown avenue, with good accommodation and old-world garden. Messrs. Battersby and Co. announce that they have disposed of "Knockrobin," Wicklow, the property advertised for their sale on 28th inst. For their property sale on 11th June they announce 13 Main street, Blackrock (formerly the "Grand Cinema"), a very extensive premises, comprising shop, residence and large hall attached, and 15 David road, Glasnevin, a two-storey house, with possession. Full details will be found in our advertising columns.

MESSRS. THOS. DOCKRELL, SONS & CO.

At their property salerooms, South Great George's street, on Thursday next, at the hour of 1.15 o'clock, this firm will offer for sale by public auction the semi-detached house, "Westbury," Willbrook road, Rathfarnham. On Wednesday, 3rd June, they will dispose of the house and contents on the premises at No. 61 Grosvenor square, Rathgar. This is a modern pre-war house in a secluded position. The house will be sold at 12 o'clock sharp, and the contents immediately afterwards.

MESSRS. HOLDEN.

As already announced in our auction columns, Messrs. Holden will offer for sale by public auction, on Tuesday next, on the premises, the residence 32 Emorville avenue, South Circular road. The sale is on instructions from the executrix of the late Peter Reilly, and will commence at 12 o'clock noon sharp.

DANDRUFF DEFEATED

Dandruff or scurf in your hair means the glands at the roots are clogged by foreign deposits and deprived of certain substances which enable them to give the roots the nourishment they require. The lack of these substances is also the main reason for falling hair and baldness. Remove dandruff now with VITA-KRIN. You will find it works amazingly quickly. VITA-KRIN tackles the trouble at its source—the glands. It gives permanent relief, not like other cures, which up to recently relied on such things as spirit to dissolve any deposits and merely gave temporary relief, and actually hindered the growth of weak new hair. Waste no time. Get VITA-KRIN to-day and get rid of dandruff. If not satisfied after using three jars, money will be refunded on production of empty jars and chemist's receipts.

GOSSIP FROM THE COURSE

CARIOCA'S CLAIMS

Lambourn Colt Reported to Have Won Good Trial

FROM OUR TRAVELLING CORRESPONDENT.

LONDON, Friday Night.

THE regrettable news is brought to us to-day that Joe Canty has tonsilitis and, therefore, will not be available to ride the Maharajah of Rajpipla's colt, Carioca, in the Derby. The colt's trainer, however, has quickly found a jockey in Arthur Wragg, the youngest of the three jockey brothers.

It is regrettable that the Irish jockey is not able to take the mount on this good staying colt. The gallop he put up the other day was, I understand, a remarkably good one, and it was probably the best test of sheer stamina that any Derby colt has been subjected to. He is not a Windsor Lad, but he is probably as good a colt as was another from Lambourn that won the Derby. Felstead, who, when the non-stayers had run themselves out, came from behind and won the race, his last flourish in public.

Felstead had done no more in public than Carioca has done, before he went to Epsom, and if he had been beaten in a previous race at Hurst Park he would not have been started at Epsom.

A General Fancy

Whatever the important bettors support in the Derby, I know what will be the general fancy of the public, and that will be Taj Akbar, because Gordon Richards rides him. The champion jockey is holding the centre of the stage, with all the spot light on him—three winners at Bath on Wednesday; four at Salisbury yesterday, and three more at the same meeting to-day.

When he had won the Stonehenge Selling Plate on Minos this afternoon it made his eighth consecutive winner in eight rides. This was the second race of the afternoon; for he had won the first event, the Wilton Maiden Selling Plate for Sir William Cooke's Golden Glow, who beat Frank Hartigan's Athis by a length and a half.

Then he had a couple unplaced, but he took up the thread again in the last race, the Longleat Stakes, which he won for the Beckhampton stable on Mr. Dewar's Outbreak.

Well off the Mark

Richards generally makes a slow start to the season, but this year he was slower than usual in getting away. He is well off the mark now, and will soon have ridden his fiftieth winner of the season.

That he will be the leading jockey again at the end of it there is no manner of doubt, unless in the event of some accident or other calamity.

The principal race of the afternoon, the Salisbury Cup, was won by Bloater, who had been second to Chrysler II. in the same race twelve months ago. Mr H. H. Benson bought Bloater from Lord Rosebery to lead Windsor Lad in his work for the Coronation Cup and the Eclipse last year.

Won the London Cup

He did that job well, and in the meantime won the London Cup at Alexandra Park himself. That was his only success last season, and when he started joint favourite for the Chester Cup this month he found the distance a little too far.

The mile and a half here suited him better, and he was a comfortable winner by three parts of a length and three lengths from the favourite, Petit Bleu, and Dark Deeds.

Gordon Richards's mount here was Phœbus, but he had to be pulled up. The champion then rode the beautifully bred Matinal, a half-sister by Biandford to Tiffin, in the Salisbury Stakes, but she could only finish third behind Ullin's Daughter and Pimlico.

Selections

The best racing to-morrow is at Lingfield, where the Cosmopolitan Cup has cut up wretchedly, there being only eight acceptances from an entry of thirty-nine. The best should be JACK TAR, who has Armour Bright to beat.

The Oaks Trial Plate may be won by MISS WINDSOR, from the same stable as Carioca, and the Lingfield Three-year-old Handicap by HOLLANDS.

GALTEE MORE.

HOLLANDS' CHANCE

Jack Tar May Beat Solar Bear for Cosmopolitan Cup

ALTHOUGH the Lingfield course would be all the better for several hours' heavy rain, runners look likely to be plentiful for the majority of events to-day. The £1,000 Cosmopolitan Cup will attract only a small field. In no way is that due to the hard going. The race fared badly at the acceptance stage, all except eight of the thirty-nine entries being withdrawn.

When a valuable race cuts up to this extent it is usually because there is something with an outstanding chance at the weights. I doubt if that is the reason here, though I do consider Jack Tar has been given a splendid chance with 7st. 11lb. He never showed in the Chester Cup, when carrying a 10lb. penalty; in his previous race he dead-heated with Quashed in the Great Metropolitan Stakes.

Elmstead, who was not in the first ten at Epsom, can claim an advantage of only 1lb. Owers was behind Elmstead on similar terms at Gatwick last Saturday. Thus, Jack Tar appears to hold two of his five opponents quite safely.

Armour Bright ran inconspicuously in the Queen's Prize. I think he has a little too much to do with 9st. Solar Bear must be considered if only because he is the mount of Gordon Richards, who is in irresistible form. Solar Bear started favourite for a mile and a half handicap on his only appearance this year. He may have run a little "green."

Plunger did not appear to be staying on when he had his first race over a distance of ground at Newmarket. I shall not be surprised to see win from Solar Bear.

The Oaks Trial Plate will not shed much light on the "Ladies' Classic" at Epsom, none of the best fillies being due to run. Salopette, Miss Windsor, Thalia, and Satire hold the more important engagement. Salopette was considered a little unlucky when well backed in Star Comedian's race at Gatwick. Her saddle slipped; otherwise she would have been placed. All the same, I prefer who showed fine promise when fourth to Silver Birch at Newmarket. That was her first race of the season.

I think Gordon Richards will win the Three-Year-Old Handicap on HOLLANDS.

Blagrave's colt has missed several engagements with this race in view since he ran third to Esquemeling and Ferrybridge at Birmingham.

There are good accounts to hand concerning the "dark" Beckhampton youngster, Rustom Mahal, for the Weir Courtenay Plate. I shall stand the form horse,

BOB EACH WAY,

At Ayr

COMMANDER III.

appears to be a sound investment to win the Carrick Plate. He left Royston in something like his best form.

MESSE

might win the Eglinton Handicap, for she has a handy weight. "Steve" Donoghue has gone to ride here.

£200 STEEPLECHASE AT NAAS

SHANTER MAY SCORE

Jack's the Boy Expected to Win Hunters' Plate

Train—Kingsbridge, 2.0.

THOUGH fields at Naas this afternoon will not be quite as large as usual at this popular venue there is the material to provide an attractive afternoon's racing. Many of the horses that had been entered for the Naas May Steeplechase have since disqualified themselves by winning races. Shanter, Liscarney, Regal Raiment and Hot Prince have run prominently without winning, and one of this lot should capture the valuable prize. Shanter, who finished second to Knight Commander at Punchestown, may be the best to stand. Selections:—

Wallop Plate—Cornel's Court.
Sallins Plate—Greek Jim.
May Steeplechase—Shanter.
Newlands Plate—Talkless.
Hunters' Plate—Jack's the Boy.
Kill Plate—Mademoiselle Eileen.

CRICKET

INDIAN BATSMEN SCORE FREELY

AMAR SINGH GETS 14 IN FIVE MINUTES

The All-India batsmen showed themselves in a new light at Leicester yesterday. Playing carefree cricket they declared at three o'clock and set Leicestershire to get 271 runs to win in roughly three hours. By four o'clock Leicester had knocked off 47 of the runs without loss when rain set in, and the match was abandoned as a draw. Amar Singh, who was sent in early, hit up 14 in five minutes, including three boundaries, and later Jilani and Vizianagram, hitting at almost everything, obtained 78 in an hour. Vizianagram, who was responsible for 40 of these runs, got the ball to the boundary seven times.

R. C. M. Kimpton, the Australian, who has established a reputation as a forcing batsman, scored the fastest 100 of the season when playing for Oxford University against Lancashire at Oxford He reached three figures in 70 minutes. Grimblett, the Somerset batsman, won the Lawrence Trophy last year with the quickest 100, scored in 63 minutes against Essex.

SPORTING GOSSIP

Carioca's Derby Jockey

A. Wragg has been engaged to ride Carioca in the Derby in place of Joe Canty, who is suffering from tonsilitis.

Bendex Out of Cup Races

The scratching of Bendex out of all engagements includes the Coronation Cup at Epsom and the Gold Cup and the Queen Alexandra Stakes at Ascot. Bendex, who is trained by J. Leach, has not run since he failed by a short head to beat Tiberius in the Goodwood Cup last July. He injured a hock, which failed to respond to treatment as quickly as was anticipated.

Golden Miller Scratched

Golden Miller has been struck out of the Grand Steeplechase de Paris and the Grande Course de Haies, to be run at Auteuil next month. Other prominent English horses which have not accepted are Southern Hero, in the steeplechase, and John James, in the hurdle race.

Richards's Winning Sequence

Gordon Richards completed a sequence of eight winners in succession at Salisbury yesterday when he won the Stonehenge Selling Plate on Minos. He had won the last two races at Bath on Wednesday, followed by four winners out of four rides at Salisbury on Thursday, and the first two winners yesterday. He also won the last race on Outbreak.

Norman Scobie's 200 Winners

Norman Scobie won his 200th race in the British Isles for his patron, Sir Charles Hyde, when Reefer was successful in the Montrose Handicap at Ayr yesterday. Since he became private trainer to Sir Charles in 1925 he has won over £79,000 including place money, with the horses in his charge. Before coming to England, Scobie was successful as a trainer in Australia, where he won the Derby and Oaks in 1919.

GAELIC GAMES

AN EXPERIMENTAL DUBLIN TEAM

FAUGHS FANCIED FOR THE SENIOR FINAL

BY PAT'O.

Dublin will field an experimental football side to-morrow against Offaly at Mullingar, as five of last year's side have declared for their native counties under the non-resident rule. It occasionally happens that new "talent" comes to light unexpectedly in such experiments, and I think fifteen footballers can be found to beat Offaly in the first round of the Leinster Championship proper.

Offaly won last year's Leinster junior. In a recent match against Westmeath's best side they played good football. They are a heavy, robust side, but I consider them below Dublin in football. We shall have a distinctly native Dublin side out, and that may urge the city men to high endeavour

Hurling interest locally centres in the Faughs v. Eoghan Rhuas semi-final of the Senior Dublin Championship at Killester Park. Eoghan Rhuas astonished us by putting Young Irelands out of the competition in the first round. They are closely knit as a team, and are not afraid to mix it when the tackling is close. Connolly and Cahill are tireless backs, and there is plenty of fire in the team in front.

Faughs have had lean years since 1932, as the newcomers failed to fill the places of Moclair, Walsh and Moore. Team-building has, however, been more successful this year than usual. The pair of Galway backs, Gill (junior) and Quinn, are a decided acquisition. Faughs have a better backline now than in any year since 1930. Wade and Devitt are a midfield force, and, if there is a weak link in Faughs' side, it is in attack. They will get plenty of chances to win to-morrow, and I think the final will lie between them and University College.

Mayo's senior footballers should win well from Sligo at Ballina, whilst Monaghan and Armagh should qualify for the next round of the Ulster Championship.

There is a triple bill for the opening of Cusack Park at Ennis. Cork and Clare are closely matched in football, and Kilkenny hurlers will play an attractive game against Clare.

Much Southern interest is centred in the senior hurling replay between Blackrock and St. Finnbarrs. Blackrock won the first match by 2 points, but a time-keeping error, acknowledged by the referee, brought an appeal, and resulted in a replay.

CIVIL SERVICE FINAL

LAND COMM. 2-3 POST & TELEGRAPHS 2-2

Land Commission won the final of Division 1, Inter-Departmental Football Competition, by beating Post and Telegraphs. They had a lead of two goals and four points at the end of the first half hour, but were hard pressed towards the close of the second, when Post and Telegraphs had the better of the play. The scorers were:—Land Commission—Skelly and Jacobs (goals), Fletcher (6), Malina and Reardon (points); Post and Telegraphs—Leahy (goal and point), Delany (goal), Fadden (point).

LAWN TENNIS

TWO BRITISH PAIRS IN FRENCH SEMI-FINAL

Two of Britain's three pairs won their way into the semi-finals of the men's doubles in the French championships at Paris yesterday. Perry and Austin beat Martin-Legeay and Leseur, 6-4, 6-1, 5-7, 6-3, and Hughes and Tuckey beat Pelizza and Petra, 10-8, 4-6, 6-0, 6-4. Hare and Wilde were beaten by Jean Borotra and Marcel Bernard, 12-10, 6-3, 6-3.

Hughes and Miss Noel passed into the quarter-finals of the mixed doubles by beating J. Brugnon and Mlle. Jedrzejowska by 5-7, 6-4, 6-4, and Bernard and Miss Yorke beat P. Pelizza and Mme. Gorod-Nitchenko by 6-2, 9-7.

YACHTING

WEEK-END FIXTURES

The wind shifted to the Nor'West yesterday, and if it remains about that point there is some hope for racing in the Bay this week-end.

The R.A.Y.C. season opens this afternoon with a handicap for yachts not exceeding 16 tons. Espanola, Punctilio and Nepenthe are expected to go in it, and there may be other starters. The first gun will be fired at 2.55 p.m.

The D.B.S.C. programme is exactly the same as it was last week-end. Starting times and handicaps (for Unclassified Boats) are as before.

The season at Howth is due to open this afternoon, but Howth S.C. is in the same position as the Dublin Bay S.C. in having the 17-Footers' class mostly unready, and it is not clear at the time of writing whether this class will be strong enough to form a race either at Howth or Kingstown.

WATER POLO

A POOR TRIAL GAME

WHITES..... 4 BLUES..... 4

The second trial arranged by the Leinster Branch in connection with the International game v. England in July took place at Tara street Baths last night. Wallace, Daly and Kearns stood down from the selected teams, and were replaced by Maguire, Murphy and Rudd.

The game was poor, and combination was lacking throughout. Maguire (2) and O'Brien (2) scored for Whites, and Fletcher (2), Case and Dowds for Blues.

Whites—K. O'Grady (capt.) (Clontarf); M. A. O'Mahony (Clontarf), P. Purcell (Dublin University); F. Murphy (Pembroke); W. L. M. Maguire (Clontarf), H. P. Dockrell (Dublin University), and L. O'Brien (Sandycove).

Blues—J. P. Shannon (Pembroke); H. A. Daniels (Dublin University), N. F. Judd (capt.) (Sandycove); D. Rudd (Pembroke); M. D. Fletcher (Dublin University), R. N. Case (Clontarf), and F. Dowds (Dublin).

Financial News & Notes

DUBLIN IDLE

ALLIANCE GAS LOWER

GUINNESS EASIER

Idle conditions marked the close of the week on the Dublin Stock Exchange yesterday and prices inclined to slip away in places.

The Free State Funds held steady to firm and the Fourth National Loan improved to 101¼. War Loan eased slightly, but Banks held up well.

Guinness fell away to 158s., but Distillers Ord. hardened to 105s.

Great Southern Rails came into demand and the Pref. rose 15s. and the Guar. 10s.

Dublin Tram Ord. were sellers and Alliance Gas Ord. fell 2s. 6d. on further profit-taking. Ranks (Ireland) Ord. moved up to 14s. 6d. The rest of the Irish Industrial list showed a steady to firm appearance

Textiles inclined to harden and Coats Ord. and Courtaulds added pence.

Imperial Tobaccos drooped to 156s. 9d. and Unilever Ord., Imperial Chemicals and Dunlop Rubbers all eased slightly.

LONDON SMALL

SHARP SETBACK IN "TWIN EAGLES"

Recent unfavourable news, especially the Chancellor's warning regarding high taxation, was responsible for a further shrinkage of business on the London Stock markets yesterday, where conditions were the quietest for some time past. Nevertheless, the undertone in several directions was slightly firmer, and in the Industrial market numerous issues took a turn for the better. In Oil shares, however, Mexican and Canadian Eagles were depressed by forced selling, and, despite a late rally finished substantially lower.

BRITISH FUNDS

The market for Gilt-edged securities remained under the influence of the Chancellor's remarks concerning the taxation outlook, and prices again moved adversely. There was no marked disposition to sell, however, and recessions were of little consequence.

FOREIGN BONDS

Foreign Bonds maintained Thursday's improved tendency, and with dealers regarding the position in China more hopefully the bonds of that country recovered further. Brazilians attracted modest support and presented a firm appearance, and among Europeans most German, French and Belgian issues improved.

RAILS

British Rails were still neglected and a few small sales caused fresh dulness in L.M.S. Ord. and one or two others. Foreign Rails were mainly quiet and steady, but Cordoba Central 1st Debs were affected by liquidation and dropped to 38½. American Rails were subdued and easier where changed, but Colonials showed firmness, with Grand Trunks in the ascendant.

INDUSTRIALS

In an irregular Industrial section Iron and Steels shook off their recent depression and higher rates were quoted for a number of issues in the Textile, Building and Stores group. Strength was also shown by Henry Meadows Ord., Consolidated Signal and Tate and Lyle. On the other hand, trans-Atlantics weakened and Cable stocks receded owing to the chairman's disappointing remarks at the meeting.

MINES

Trading in the Mining sections was subdued and quotations for "Kaffirs" moved in undecided fashion. West Wits. finished firm, however, and Central Mining and a few others hardened. West Africans, though quiet, were fairly steady, and Westralians were not without a few firm spots.

THE INDUSTRIAL MARKET

QUIET, BUT RATHER STEADIER

Quiet conditions again prevailed in most sections of the Industrial Market yesterday, though, on the whole, the undertone seemed somewhat steadier.

The trans-Atlantic counters seemed rather undecided in their movement, though they finished steady in the late dealings. Cable and Wireless stocks were marked down following the Chairman's remarks at the meeting.

Iron and Steel descriptions had a firmer appearance, the recent decline attracting fresh buyers. Guest Keens were a much better market than of late, recovering 1s. to 35s.

As regards Electrical Equipments, Crompton Parkinson held the improvement of the preceding day at 66s. Enfield Cables, however, declined 1s. 6d.

Aviation and kindred descriptions remained dull, prices declining as a result of moderate realisations.

Motor shares commanded little attention, and price changes were generally adverse.

Textiles made an irregular appearance. Coats were again a shade better at 53s. 3d., but Patons and Baldwins gave way to 33s., and Bleachers to 5s. 1½d.

Among Rayons Courtaulds showed some improvement at 49s., while British Celanese rose a few pence.

Tate and Lyle recovered 1s. 3d. to 88s. 9d. Among Provision and Catering shares Unilever hardened to 35s. 6d.

Breweries were rather easier; Guinness and a few others lost ground.

Tobaccos remained on the quiet side.

Prices moved rather irregularly in the Miscellaneous section, but several firm spots were again in evidence. Henry Meadows continued in good demand up to 6½. Dunlop Rubbers were a few pence harder and Triplex Glass held around the previous close. British Portland Cements made a better showing at 44s.

RUBBERS IDLE

Although buying was on an extremely restricted scale, the tone of the Rubber Share market yesterday was steady and the majority of shares were maintained at their previous closing levels. Slow business was transacted in the commodity section, with spot rubber easier at 7-⅛d. per lb. United Kingdom stocks were estimated to have been reduced by 1,350 tons during the past week.

SHARP FALL IN EAGLE OILS

In the Oil Share market it was not long before the Eagle issues came on offer. There were no indications of forced selling, but the sales were, nevertheless, of a heavy character, and were thought to emanate from operators who had bought largely when the price was much lower and were cashing in on their profits. The turnover in Mexicans was extremely large and, although there were periodical rallies, the shares finished distinctly dull in the "street" at 23s. 6d., the result of the day's business being a fall of 2s. 3d. Canadian Eagles also suffered from realisations. Trinidad issues had a dull appearance.

CEMENT, LIMITED

Next Tuesday's issue by Cement, Limited, has attracted considerable attention in the cross-Channel Press, owing to the fact that it is the first issue by an Irish Free State company to be made simultaneously in Dublin and London. A separate prospectus for the £450,000 5½ per cent. Debenture stock on offer is being published in the leading English papers over the week-end, and applications for the stock will be invited in London on Tuesday next. As the rate of interest offered is considerably higher than obtains on similar securities in Great Britain, it is expected that there will be a keen inquiry for the issue on the part of the large professional investors.

Arrangements in London are in the hands of the house of Myers and Company. The sub-underwriting reserved for London was very quickly taken up. As application will be made for permission to deal in the London Stock Exchange, the marketability of the stock should be greatly widened, and this will be an added attraction for investors on this side.

Being Debenture stock, interest can be paid, if necessary, out of capital from the commencement, and it is stated in the prospectus that the first payment of interest will be made on December 31, 1936. Also there is no restriction as regards the nationality of the holders of Debenture stock.

In addition to the Debenture stock on issue the company is also issuing 300,000 shares of £1 each. Naturally, owing to the special advantages under which Cement, Limited, will operate here, the shares are considerably more attractive than the Debenture stock to the investor requiring a good lock-up investment and who does not mind waiting during a short construction period. The share issue is reserved exclusively for Dublin. Half of the issue has already been placed with the Tunnel Portland Cement Company, Limited (who will be responsible for the technical management of Cement, Limited) and their associates.

The wedding of Mr. William B. Leeds, the young American millionaire, and Miss Olive Hamilton, the girl whose life he saved from drowning is expected to take place to-day in mid-ocean on board Mr. Leeds's steam yacht, the Moana.

BOLANDS, LTD., MILLS AND BAKERIES

THE CHAIRMAN'S REVIEW

A YEAR'S RECORD OF PROGRESS

BAKERIES' INCREASED OUTPUT

RESERVES FURTHER STRENGTHENED

SHAREHOLDERS' CONGRATULATIONS

The forty-eighth annual ordinary general meeting of Bolands, Ltd., was held at the company's offices, Grand Canal quay, Dublin, yesterday. Mr. Daniel J. O'Donohoe, Chairman of the company, presided. The following directors were also present:—Messrs. William Findlater, John Quinn and Patrick Murphy.

Mr. Sean Curry, Assistant Secretary, read the notice convening the meeting and the auditors' report to the shareholders, which was as follows:—"We have examined the above balance sheet and profit and loss account, and have obtained all the information and explanations required by us. The stock-in-trade has been ascertained, priced and certified to us by the company's officials, as hitherto. The above balance sheet is, in our opinion, properly drawn up, so as to exhibit a true and correct view of the state of the company's affairs, according to the best of our information and the explanations given to us, and as shown by the books of the company."

THE CHAIRMAN'S STATEMENT

Ladies and gentlemen, as customary, you will, no doubt, agree to take as read the directors' report and the accounts, which have been in your hands for some days.

The Board continue in their policy of steadily proceeding year by year with the remodelling of buildings and the replacement of machinery and plant, in order to obtain the utmost efficiency in production, as well as a greater improvement in the quality of the wide range of the company's products. In every branch of the company's operations there has been substantial and record progress, and the directors regard with much satisfaction the fact that this experience has for many years past been continuous and unbroken.

As I explained to you in my previous report, all Free State mills are on a quota, and I am glad to say that we have had no difficulty whatever in milling the full amount of the quota allotted to us. In this respect we were more fortunate than some of our competitors, as you will, no doubt, have observed from reports in the local papers that several mills were forced to go on short time as a result of the large stocks of flour held.

RUMOUR OF ANOTHER NEW MILL.

Since I addressed you last year one 14-sack plant and one 3-sack plant, both of which had been silent for a considerable time, together with one new 15-sack plant, have been put into operation. Further, there is an additional new 7-sack plant, which will shortly be in commission, notwithstanding the fact that prior to these additions the existing mills were producing sufficient flour to meet the country's requirements. It is obvious that these additional plants are superfluous and their operation puts the milling industry in a very precarious position, because if these mills work their full capacity a surplus of flour will be produced, and, in order to dispose of this surplus, it will be necessary for the mills to work on short time. This will automatically have the effect of increasing the cost of production, as the overhead charges will remain the same and, of course, the earning capacity of the mill operatives will be greatly reduced. It has been rumoured recently, and not, I am sure, without a certain amount of foundation, that the erection of yet another mill in the northern part of the Free State is in contemplation. Naturally, if this scheme is carried out, the adverse conditions which I have indicated will be greatly aggravated and the repercussions will seriously affect the mill workers.

The largely increased production of home-grown wheat has rendered it necessary for the Government to make special requirements of the millers to ensure the disposal of the increased production, and there is also a statutory requirement whereby the bulk of the home-grown wheat has to be purchased by the millers and taken into stock within the three months following the harvest. This means that for the greater portion of the year millers have to carry largely increased stocks of wheat, and this involves the provision of increased accommodation, both in storage and finance.

IRISH WHEAT QUOTA PROBLEM.

The quantity of native wheat to be used by millers, in compliance with the Government statute, during the present cereal year, which ends on 31st August next, is 21½ per cent., as compared with 10¾ per cent. last year. I understand the forecast for the coming cereal year is over 30 per cent.

For the past three years the Government, in fixing the percentage of native wheat to be used by millers, has over-estimated the country's yield and fixed too high a figure, which had subsequently to be reduced. The effect of this change of percentage was a variation in the quality of the flour, particularly in what is known as "Bakers' Flour." This, as you will readily understand, is most undesirable, as it is vitally important that flour should be maintained at a uniform quality throughout the year. It would, therefore, be advisable, and much more practical, if the native percentage was fixed at a figure more closely equivalent to the country's yield, and so obviate the necessity for the variation in the quality of the flour.

THE BAKERY PRODUCTS.

As I explained to you last year, there is an ever-increasing demand for our bakery products, and the output this year stands at a record figure. This is the most eloquent and convincing testimony I can offer you of their popularity. We were obliged to build an additional factory to our bakery department, which has been completed and in operation since October last, and without which we would have been unable to meet the increased demand for our products.

The profit of £28,831 is a slight increase over last year's figure; but, to my mind, is hardly in proportion to the amount of capital involved and our huge turnover.

ALLOCATIONS TO RESERVES.

No doubt you will agree with the directors' recommendations to increase the annual allocations to the depreciation account and the reserve and renewals fund, which, if approved of, will bring these totals to £16,000 and £37,000 respectively. There is also an allocation of £1,000 to the employes' benevolent fund, with which I am sure you will agree.

The balance sheet requires very little comment. You will observe under the heading of special expenditure that we have written off the sum of £5,000, and added the sum of £5,000 for special outlay on bakeries during the year. It is the intention of the directors to allocate an annual sum to this account until it is cleared. Sundry debtors are up by approximately £5,000, which is quite consistent with our increased output. Investments are up by approximately £2,000.

Turning to the liabilities side of the sheet, the only figure of note is that of sundry creditors, which is reduced by just £2,000. This gives you an indication of our strong financial position.

That covers the whole of the accounts, and I do not think there is anything I can usefully add to what I have already said. We have all sections moving forward in the right direction at the same time, and it is very gratifying to me personally to have the privilege of placing these accounts before you.

To our various officials and staff we accord our grateful appreciation. We have been loyally supported by all connected with the company, and it must be as pleasurable to them as it is to me to show this record of achievement.

In these circumstances, ladies and gentlemen, I beg to move:—"That the report of the directors and the accounts for the year ended 28th March, 1936, be, and are hereby, received and adopted."

Mr. Patrick Murphy seconded the motion.

SHAREHOLDERS' VIEWS.

Senator Bernard O'Rourke said that the board had adopted the policy of putting on the market the best products both on the milling and the bakery sides. That was good business. The firm would have more competition to meet in the near future, and they might have a production of surplus flour, leading to a fall in their profits. But they would be able to meet all comers, and he had no doubt that their balance sheet would continue to be satisfactory.

Mr. Thomas Lynch said that he was more optimistic than Senator O'Rourke. Having as their chairman the gentleman who took their business out of the state in which it was five or six years ago, they need have no fears, no matter what competition might arise. When they compared the statement of accounts that day with the situation which existed a few years ago, it was marvellous that the company should have prospered as it had done. He congratulated the directors on their conservative policy of adding to their reserves instead of paying too much away, and he congratulated them on the magnificently satisfactory state of the company.

The chairman said that there was no doubt that the competition in the future in the Irish milling industry would be very, very keen. But they had the skill, the plant and the capital, and they were in a position to compete with all competitors.

The motion was adopted unanimously.

On the motion of the chairman, seconded by Mr. William Findlater, dividends were declared upon the Preference share capital in respect of the half-year ended 28th March, 1936, at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, less income tax, and upon the Ordinary share capital in respect of the half-year ended same date at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, free of income tax, the warrants to be issued on 25th inst. to shareholders as now registered.

RE-ELECTION OF DIRECTOR AND AUDITORS.

Mr. John Spicer proposed that Mr. William Findlater, who retired by rotation, be re-elected a director of the company. The shareholders, he said, were fortunate in having on the board a gentleman of Mr. Findlater's business capacity.

Mr. Charles Farrell seconded the motion, which was unanimously adopted.

On the motion of Mr. Andrew O'Shaughnessy, seconded by Senator O'Rourke, Messrs. M. Crowley and Co. were unanimously re-elected auditors for the current year.

Mr. P. J. Purtill, F.C.A., LL.B., returned thanks on behalf of Messrs. Crowley and Co.

SHAREHOLDERS' THANKS TO DIRECTORS AND STAFF.

Mr. Thomas Lynch proposed a vote of thanks to the Chairman, directors, managers and staff for the manner in which they had conducted the business of the company during the year. He did not know that there was another business in Dublin, he said, which was so well looked after as their business was.

Senator O'Rourke seconded the vote of thanks. The company, he said, had improved by leaps and bounds. A success had been made of it by giving to the public top-notch quality both in bread and flour. If the company continued on those lines, they would be able, twenty-five years hence, to present a flourishing balance sheet, such as they had done that day.

The vote of thanks was unanimously adopted; and was acknowledged by the Chairman.

THE AMERICAN MARKETS

QUIET, BUT FIRM, SESSION

REUTER'S TELEGRAMS.

NEW YORK, Friday.

Some Wall street brokers reported to-day that their clients were awaiting the final terms of the Tax Bill before taking up positions in the market. Trading was again very quiet, but the day's turnover amounted to only 680,000 shares.

Rubber shares advanced on talk of higher tyre prices shortly, while Motors also came in for support. The close was firm. Advances ranging to a point were shown by Chemicals, Communications, Oils, Rails, Utilities and "Wet" stocks, while the Farm Implement, Industrial, Merchandising and Steel sections gained anything to 2 points.

Sterling exchange opened ⅞ up at 4.97⅞, but dropped during the morning to 4.97¼. The rate improved to 4.97⅛ in the afternoon, and finally closed ⅞ higher, compared with the previous close, at 4.97⅛.

Silver was unchanged at 44¾.

PALESTINE PRECAUTIONS

TROOPS WITH FIXED BAYONETS

'PLANES ASSIST IN HILL SEARCH

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.

JERUSALEM, Friday.

MORE British troops were to be seen here to-day than at any time during the disturbances of the last five weeks. Scottish soldiers are guarding the main points of the town with fixed bayonets. Police patrols, also in steel helmets, with British constables carrying rifles, and native police carrying heavy pick handles and shields, are on beat duty.

All approaches to the old city are manned by strong detachments and all persons entering and leaving are carefully searched for arms.

The First Battalion of the Seaforth Highlanders landed this morning from Cairo. The 42nd Field Company Royal Engineers has arrived to assist the Government in maintaining telephone and railway communications.

A British Army patrol early this morning prevented an attempt by armed Arab raiders to ambush a milk and supply convoy proceeding from Hederah to Haifa. A number of shots were fired on the convoy, but the attackers dispersed on the arrival of a detachment of the 1st Battalion the Loyal Regiment (North Lancashire).

DUE TO COMMUNISTS?

It is reported that an attempt to set fire to the new Customs sheds and a number of pavilions at the Levant fair at Tel Aviv occurred during the night. The outrage is attributed to Communists.

An Arab who was seriously wounded in the old city of Jerusalem yesterday died this morning.

Search is still proceeding for the snipers who fired at a Jewish motor 'bus and afterwards wounded a Cameron Highlander in the leg.

Another 'bus was fired at yesterday on the Jerusalem-Jaffa road, at the same spot as the Jewish 'bus, but from an opposite hill. No one was hurt.

Royal Air Force 'planes have been assisting the police in their search of the hills.

A bomb was thrown at the Jaffa police station at midday to-day. There were no casualties.

THE BELGIAN ELECTIONS

WOMEN CANDIDATES IN THE FIELD

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.

BRUSSELS, Friday.

THE elections for both Legislative Chambers in Belgium take place on Sunday. For the second time since the war and in the history of Belgium, a three-party coalition Government will be in office while the elections are held.

There are 1,124 candidates for the Chamber of Representatives, of whom 16 are women. For the Senate there are 550 candidates, seven of them women.

Under the Constitution the number of deputies is fixed according to the size of the population, and it cannot exceed one deputy to 40,000 inhabitants. In the old Chamber there were 187 deputies, the strength of the parties being as follows:

Catholics, 79.
Socialists, 73.
Liberals, 24.
Flemish Nationalists, 8.
Communists, 3.

In political circles, it is believed, that a National Government will be reconstituted following the elections to continue to carry out the programme of "national reconstruction."

In the new Chamber there will be 202 deputies, owing to an increase in population.

The Senate consists of members who are elected for four years.

CLONTARF PARISH CHURCH

NEW RECTOR INSTALLED

The Rev. J. B. Neligan, B.A., was last night installed by the Most Rev. Dr. Gregg, Archbishop of Dublin, as Rector of the Parish of Clontarf. Ordained in 1926, the Rev. Mr. Neligan was appointed curate of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Rathmines, and honorary clerical vicar of Christ Church Cathedral till his installation in 1929 as curate of the Parish of Clontarf. In 1932 he was appointed Rector of the Parish of St. Jude, and, on the death of the former Rector, he has now been appointed to the Parish of Clontarf, which he left as a curate about four years ago.

Educated at Trinity College, Dublin, Mr. Neligan distinguished himself not alone as a classical scholar, but as a keen sportsman, and during his sojourn in Trinity he took a prominent part in the Rugby and other sports clubs of the University.

Among the clergy present were:—The Archdeacon of Dublin, Canon E. G. Sullivan, Canon T. W. E. Drury, the Rev. M. T. Porteus, Curate of Clontarf; the Rev. J. G. Hodges, the Rev. H. L. Forde, the Rev. E. F. B. Moore, the Rev. M. A. Handy and the Very Rev. Dr. J. L. Morrow.

TRAINING DUBLIN BOYS AS BURGLARS

In the Dublin District Court yesterday, before Mr. Cussen, a youth of 16 and two younger boys were charged with breaking and entering a house in Declan road and stealing money from a gas meter.

"It is impossible to allow this sort of thing to go on," said Mr. Cussen. "Young boys are being trained as burglars by other boys who are older than themselves." He held that the eldest boy was responsible for bringing the two children with him.

The case was adjourned for a week.

Clare Cattle Drive.—Close on 200 cattle belonging to various owners who had their stock grazing on the lands of Islanda-vanna, Tiermaclane, the property of the Fergus Reclamation Syndicate, of which Mr. W. J. Barrington, of Monkstown, County Dublin, is the managing director, were driven off the lands on Tuesday night or early on Wednesday morning by unknown persons. Civic Guards and detectives spent Wednesday and Thursday in tracing the cattle, all of which were eventually restored to their owners. The motive for the "drive" is attributed to a desire to have the land divided.

* * * * *

Donagal Affronted.—There will probably be a further discussion of the Derry Wards revision scheme at the monthly meeting of Donegal County Council at Lifford on Tuesday, when Councillor Michael O'Donnell will move the following resolution:—"That no advertisements of this Council, the County Board of Health, or any of the subsidiary committees, be given to those newspapers which have referred to the majority of the people of this county and of Derry City as 'tramps, tinkers, and ne'er-do-wells,' unless public apologies are made for such insulting remarks."

* * * * *

Garden Party.—Very fine weather favoured the holding of the garden fête in Mrs. V. Lentaigne's beautiful grounds at Newtown, Termonfeckin. The attendance was very large, and included the Right Rev. Monsignor Lyons, P.P., V.G., St. Peter's, Drogheda; His Lordship Bishop Galvin, Chinese Mission; Canon Harmon, Canon Johnston, the Rev. Dr. Maguire, St. Columban's, Navan, and a large number of other clergy from the surrounding district. The beautiful grounds and house at Newtown were open all day to those attending the fête. A large number of variety entertainments were well patronised, and competitions also attracted large entries.

WOODVIEW, STILLORGAN ROAD.

A delightful old-fashioned Residence, with old world garden and tennis lawn. Situated well back from the road, and offering attractions rarely met with.
The House, which is in excellent repair, contains a good hall, floored in ornamental tiles, off which there are drawingroom, diningroom, and a room at present used as a billiard room. On the upper floor there are five excellent bedrooms, bathroom, two servants' rooms, pantry with hot and cold water, larder, etc.
The House is fronted by an ornamental shrubbery, and behind it lies the great garden, surrounded by a high wall and in a high state of cultivation. Portion of the ground is laid out in a croquet or tennis lawn, and the entire forms a very attractive amenity to the Residence. There is a greenhouse.
In an enclosed yard there are garage coach-house, etc.
The entire held for 999 years from 25th March, 1837, subject to the adjusted rent of £68 12s. 0d., but a purchaser will be entitled to receive a rent of £54 9s. 0d., payable out of adjoining property, reducing the actual outgoing to £14 3s. 0d. Clear possession to purchaser.

46 MAIN STREET, ARKLOW, CO. WICKLOW.
ATTRACTIVE SALE OF OLD-ESTABLISHED MEDICAL HALL (KNOWN AS BYRNE'S MEDICAL HALL), AND OTHER VALUABLE PROPERTY.

MICHAEL ANTHONY has been favoured with instructions from Mrs. E. Byrne to SELL by PUBLIC AUCTION, ON THE PREMISES, ON TUESDAY, 2nd DAY of JUNE, 1936, at ONE O'CLOCK, S.T. (If not previously disposed of), in the following Lots:—
LOT 1—THE OLD ESTABLISHED MEDICAL HALL, in full working order, situate in centre of Main street, Arklow, held under Lease for 99 years from 1st May, 1900, at the yearly rent of £15.
This first class establishment is one of the best in the county, carried on without a break for well over 100 years. It holds a prominent position in Main street of this important town, and enjoys an extensive retail and dispensing business. It is beautifully fitted up with mahogany counters, bevelled glass show cases and cabinets, and, being fully stocked, leaves it ready for the purchaser to continue business without any interruption or any penny outlay.
The Premises comprise drawingroom, diningroom, study, 4 bedrooms, maid's room, bath, h. and c., etc.; tiled kitchen and pantry, a good enclosed yard with stores, garage and gate entrance. Town water supply laid on and electric light fitted throughout with plugs in several rooms.
This Sale offers an excellent opportunity for a young enterprising chemist to acquire a select clientele and a highly lucrative ready-made business.
LOT 2.
EXPS. P. J. BYRNE, DECD.
42 LOWER MAIN STREET, ARKLOW.

BUSINESS HOUSE AND PREMISES, SITUATE IN LOWER MAIN STREET ARKLOW. Held under Lease for the term of 80 years from 25th March, 1902, at the yearly rent of £3. P.L. Val., £18.
These Premises comprise fine double-windowed Shop with 2 counters, 2 reception rooms, 6 bedrooms, bathroom, h. and c., etc.; tiled kitchen, with close range; spacious enclosed yard, with ample storage and entrance from street.
This is an exceptionally good sound property in Main street, in close proximity to new factory, which gives employment to 300 hands, close to quays and in a populous area. Water is installed and the whole place fitted with electric light. As in Lot 1, the owner always maintained this property in first class order, and on that account there is very little left for the purchaser to expend.
Above Lots can be inspected on application to Solicitors.
